THE misty days of Autumn, with ever-changing foliage, are softly weaving a veil of sensitive beauty over the land. My Lady of Fashion must needs follow suit and has transferred her interest from the bright, airy creations of Summer to the more sombre tones and richer materials of Autumn.

The absorbing question in the feminine world just at present is, What is to be worn this Winter?

The woman who wishes to be picturesque can be so to her heart's content, and can range from period to period, choosing the best from each, as the present season is very generous in the matter of modes.

Every conceivable variation of the over-blouse styles are in vogue, and all show the Japanese effect in the treatment of the sleeves. This graceful sleeve has been greatly modified since it first appeared on this side of the water about two years ago.

It is now seen in many practical forms and is the dominating feature in the Fall models. It frequently consists of bands of rich embroidery, Oriental trimming or heavy lace that encircles the armhole and is merely attached at the shoulder.

The sleeve proper now forms part of the guimpe, which usually accompanies the dress. In fact, the guimpe and under-sleeves are now usually regarded as part of the gown.

Everything in dress materials this season is of the softest and most supple material and well adapted to the graceful modes now in vogue. The soft, silky broad cloth is the material par excellence for the dressy toilette, and takes precedence over every other material.

The season is not far to seek, for with soft, full effects, draped sleeves and cling-ing lines generally no other fabric seems quite so appropriate.

The Princess lines still prevail, but the high belt and girdle trimming that now prevail give an entirely different effect. They are not cut in one piece, as formerly, but are made with bodice and skirt mounted on a Princess lining.

Rumor has it that the right-fitting boned basque of former days is coming in again but as yet very few models are shown.

A pronounced feature of the season is the use of long, narrow vests. These are of velvet and enriched with jinal braiding or applications of gold and silver cloth. Japanese embroidery and soutache braiding in colors, notably a deep metallic blue on a black velvet background, being distinctly Oriental. French blue, the soft, dull reds and brown are also favored.

Plum color in an almost endless variety of shades is one of the leading colors of the season. Green is also to be much in evidence, but in combination with black.

Paris is favoring the violet shades, the colors running from the deep royal purple to pale lavender.

The grace and simplicity of the over-blouse modes, completed by guimpes, have won for them many admirers, especially among the home dressmakers as there is so little fitting to be done. The ones shown here are among the newest and are exceedingly smart.

One design shows the short, wide kimono sleeve, cut in one with the garment. The surplice effect is the latest development in waists of this character and promises to be very popular.

Tiny vests are a pretty addition to another model, rendering it somewhat different and unusual. The sleeves of this one are circular in cut, and deep gauntlets of the lower edge over the undersleeve of sheer white batiste.

The original from which this model was taken was developed in plaid taffeta, but any of the season's materials will make up well after this pattern.

There is no garment more necessary to a woman's comfort than a pretty dainty negligee. There are many new and attractive designs for them, but this one seems to commend itself at once, by the unusual grace and simplicity of every line.

The sleeves admit of being made full length, completed by narrow bands, or they may be in the fashionable elbow length, which is preferred by many for a garment of this kind, on account of the comfort to be obtained.

What would womankind do without the ever-useful, practical work apron that covers the entire gown? The popularity of the two here illustrated is due to their absolute simplicity, as well as the neat appearance they present.

They are provided with pockets and full-length sleeves, that are wide enough to easily accommodate the dress sleeve underneath, thus assuring protection to the daintiest frock.

WHAT LA

BY MRS. CHOLLY KNIC

Gowns Worn by Mrs. Herman Duryea and Mrs. Carroll Brown at an Open-Air Horse Show, and Mrs. "Joe" Widener's Novel Collar Pin.

A Diamond Collar Pin Worn by Mrs. "Joe" Widener.

Mrs. Carroll Brown.

EVERY season of the year, to a certain set, the horse is king. There is always a good excuse for the worship of his equine majesty.

Races, polo, the hunt, gymkhanas—they all give us a chance to show our interest in horse flesh, and, incidentally, afford us an opportunity to wear very pretty clothes.

For, really, the set interested in things "horsy" is quite the smartest set. To ride to hounds, to play polo or have a box at the races gives a cachet not obtainable in any other way.

This Summer and Autumn we have had horse shows to our heart's content. Long Branch, Bay Shore, Bar Harbor, Newport have all had horse shows of more or less success. And it won't be so very long before we must be thinking of clothes for the Greater Horse Show in New York.

For, if this year it be as in other years, it is quite as much a show of perfect clothes as perfect animals. And I wonder if after all that is not just as interesting. A horse is very good in his proper place, but I'd much rather look at pretty gowns, new and fashionable, any day.

Mrs. Herman Duryea is a woman who always takes a very keen interest in anything connected with horses.

She shares this love of racing with her dear friend, Mrs. "Tom" Hitchcock. Mrs. Herman Duryea, Mrs. "Tom" Hitchcock and Mrs. Thomas Hastings are great "pals."

John Alexander has painted striking portraits of both these women. You know he delights in making studies of red-haired women, and though we may be polite and speak of Mrs. Duryea's hair as "auburn," it is in reality red.

The portrait of Mrs. Duryea is tremendously characteristic. It has long, sweeping, sinuous lines and yet is reposeful. Mrs. Hastings's portrait has more verve and dash. She looks as if about to spring from the canvas.

I saw Mrs. Herman Duryea wearing a very charming gown at one of the horse shows in the late Summer. It was of some soft material—voilenne or a crepy veiling—in a deep shade of cream.

The skirt was most elaborately made, with panels of V shaped fine tucking, joined by bands of heavy cream-colored lace. A deep flounce finished the bottom of the skirt. This was edged with little tucks and headed by a band of the lace.

The waist also had some little tucks and a yoke of Valenciennes lace, put in in V shape. This was edged by the heavy lace, which was also used for the cuffs of the plain puffed elbow sleeves.

A smart touch—and an uncommon one, too—was added in the yellow and white checked ribbon which was crushed into a belt around Mrs. Duryea's waist. The checks were quite large—about an inch to a check—and the belt had short sash ends to the back.

The hat that Mrs. Duryea elected to wear with this creamy gown was, oddly enough, brown. Of course, brown tones deliciously with her hair, but it was hardly what I should have chosen to wear to complete this costume.

Mrs. Carroll Brown's characteristic I have be diminished in a few with little tucks at a deep stitched hem.

The coat was made with kimono sleeves which reached only to the elbows. Below a dainty waist of fine lawn and lace made its appearance.

The coat was collarless and a design done in soutache braid ran around the neck and down the fronts. The edges of the sleeves were also braided. Eyelet embroidery was used lavishly all over the little coat.

But where it differed from any white linen gown I have seen was in the half moons of bright green lines which ornamented the jacket. They were evidently cut out and applied, the line of embroidery by which they were surrounded preventing the contrast between the moons and their backgrounds being too sharp. A belt of stitched green linen was worn.

The effect of this costume might have been easily spoiled by the indiscreet choice of a hat. But Mrs. Carroll Brown's milliner was evidently a woman of taste.

To wear with it she gave her a rather large, slightly mushroom hat of fine white straw. The under side of the brim was faced with bright green satin and bright green satin bows were used for the trimming. Combined with these were the cutest green plumes. They were placed at the outer edge of the brim and looked good enough to eat, though perhaps a trifle unripe.

There is apt to be a sameness about strictly tailored suits, so when you find a line or mode of trimming which is novel it strikes you immediately.

There wasn't anything at all out of the ordinary about a coat and skirt of brown cloth. I saw more at one of the Fall horse shows, except the method of trimming, but that was novel and so I am going to tell you about it.

It was made of fine tobacco brown broadcloth—one of those thin, supple weaves which lends itself so well to plaited skirts and loose fitting coats.

The skirt was a plaited model with two bands of cloth put on around it some distance above the hem.

The jacket came just over the turn of the hips and was semi-fitting, with a charming long line from shoulder to waist. The sleeves were long, rousing quite to the wrist, and were finished with a band of the cloth fastened with a button.

There was no collar on the coat and a band of the cloth came around the neck and down the fronts and ended in a point on either side about six inches below the neck opening. A similar band of cloth ran around the bottom of the jacket and turned up the front on either side. This left a space in between the ending of the trimming bands. It was broken by six buttons—three on either side—placed up and down the front of the jacket. They were cloth covered, as were the buttons on the sleeves.

With this suit was worn a hat of rough yellow straw, trimmed with white gardenias and a big black coque feather.

Mrs. "Joe" Widener is wearing to fasten her collar a charming pin of diamonds.

It is in reality a diamond set, gold pronged buckle, and most striking it is—as well as being quite new.

No. 3,833. Boys' Dress with Knickerbockers—Sizes for 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 years. 4-year size requires 1¾ yards of 36-inch material.

No. 3,821. Girls' Dress—Sizes for 4, 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. 8-year size requires 2¾ yards of 36-inch material.

AT each change of the season, and especially after the long vacation and the return of school days comes the planning of the children's wardrobe. Plainer than ever are the styles for the wee men and maids this season; but plainness does not mean ugliness.

Whatever the amount of work used in the construction of these little garments, simple lines should be carefully kept in mind. Sometimes this appearance of extreme simplicity necessitates a greater outlay of time, but it is time and trouble well worth while.

There are hosts of attractive frocks for little school girls, but the garment that hangs straight from the shoulders, with a loose belt passed around the hips, is easily the smartest and most becoming to the average child under twelve.

An exceedingly attractive little model is here illustrated in chalkline, six large pearl buttons being the only decorations used.

A removable shield topped by a standing band is worn with the dress, and variety may be obtained by having several of these in different materials. The closing is effected at the left side under a pleat.

Scotch gingham, pique and cashmere are all equally suited to the mode. The rich Scotch plaid and small checks now shown in such endless variety and beautiful colorings offer a wide choice and simplify the problem of what to choose, as they always make up stylishly and are most becoming.

Here is a little blouse dress just suited to the plaid materials. It has an undeniable smartness about it that makes it a general favorite.

It consists of a kilt-pleated skirt, attached to a body lining, that closes in the back, and a full blouse waist.

The modish elbow sleeves are prettily finished by turned back cuffs. Mohair, delaine and challis will all make up attractively.

Turn down collars and cuffs of white linen always add a note of smartness to the little school girls' attire, and are numbered among the season's accessories.

A jaunty silk tie is knotted at the neck, of black silk, if the dress is in the gay colored plaid, or it may be of scarlet or bright blue with the black and white checks.

A square cut neck and modish little sleeve caps distinguish another pretty model, that is suitable alike for the light weight woolens and wash fabrics.

The needs of the little schoolboy have also been considered. The blouse waist is an indispensable article, and many are apt to be needed, if the active little youngster is to be kept at all presentable.

The Russian modes need no word to recommend them; they have proved to be general favorites. No better style for the little man who has just been promoted from dresses into trousers could be found than this simple little suit.

The pattern consists of full knickerbockers and a long blouse that may be worn with or without the removable shield. The style is simple, the only trimming necessary being a band that outlines the neck and front edges.

Tan colored serge was used with good effect for the development, the band being of a light shade. A belt of leather or of the material is worn about the waist, passed through straps of the material.

The design is excellent for the washable fabrics, such as linen, gingham and pique.

Velveteen and corduroy hold their old time popularity for coats, the bonnets being made to match. Broadcloth, heavy silk and Bedford cord are also much in use, and white bear cloth promises to be in greater demand even than last season.

MEANEST TRICK EVER PLAYED ON A BRIDE

How the Unscrupulous Twin Brother of Confiding Miss Scott's Fiance Sneaked in and Married Her and How She Has Just Waked Up to the Situation.

Mrs. Adeline Thomas, Who Married Calvin Thinking He Was His Brother Alvin.

The Thomas Twins, Alvin and Calvin, Whom Nobody Can Tell Apart.

"Before he realized they were eloping."

Paris, Ill., Sept. 19.

BELIEVING that she is the victim of the meanest deception that ever was practiced upon a confiding and not very observant woman, Mrs. Calvin Thomas, of this town, is furiously preparing her divorce suit.

Whether she is angrier at the Thomas twin who married her without proposal or courtship, or at the other one, who courted and proposed and after her marriage to his brother flirted with her, is doubtful.

Before her marriage Mrs. Thomas was supposed to be wealthy, but in reality she had lost the fortune left by her father ten years before. But Alvin Thomas, of Chicago, Paris and other places, supposed her an heiress. He had enough money to escape work during his thirty years of life, but he needed more, and Adeline Scott seemed to have it. Adeline was pretty, well dressed and just twenty-four years old.

Alvin began his courtship with energy at the house of Mrs. Josephus Scott, the mother of Adeline, in the town of Christman not far away. The fact that the young woman knew her fortune was almost gone may have helped to make her look favorably on matrimony.

Within a month he had proposed and been accepted and as neither had any object for delay, the marriage day was set just a month away. Alvin said not a word about his twin brother, but his fiance met him one day, to the great annoyance of Alvin.

One evening Miss Scott whispered to her betrothed: "Alvin, you must be more sensible when we are out walking. The idea of you said: 'Good-by.' You told me never you kissing me the way you did in the park yesterday. Mary Martin saw you and every one is laughing at us."

"Yesterday in the park," gasped Alvin in amazement. "What do you mean?" He had been in Chicago all the day before but was shrewd enough to ask her what had happened, explaining that he hadn't been himself that day.

"No, indeed you weren't," she answered. "You hardly knew me, and I had to call out your name before you noticed me at all. Then you smiled in a sort of foolish way and said:

"'Well, well, I can hardly think who you are.'

"We walked all around the park and you asked the most foolish questions and seemed so stupid and absent-minded for a while. Then, after I said something about the engagement, you began to laugh and

"Made a scene for his supposed conduct with another woman."

"'I'll kill you for this,' he said rushing upon his image."

"Saw him enter sober and emerge a second later, drunk."

"The poor process server couldn't tell which to serve."

Society Leaders No. 1.—Mrs. Bradley Martin.

A NEW portrait of Mrs. Bradley Martin, the famous society leader, painted by Mr. Classen Coope, appears on the preceding page.

This portrait will be studied with great interest by society on both sides of the ocean, both because it is an admirable likeness of the distinguished social leader and because it displays her gorgeous robes and jewels in a truly splendid manner.

Probably no woman in the world, except possibly the Czarina of Russia, possesses such a splendid collection of jewels as Mrs. Bradley Martin. Her rubies are especially valuable. The set, including tiara, necklace, bracelets and pins, is valued at $200,000. Mrs. Bradley Martin possesses several ropes of perfect pearls, which are worth $140,000. Various beautiful pins are valued altogether at $50,000. One of her diamond hair ornaments alone is worth $2,000. The exquisite fan which she holds lightly in her right hand is valued at $8,000.

One of the most splendid ornaments in her possession is a breastplate composed of diamonds. It covers the entire front of a low cut bodice. The wearer of this magnificent piece of jewelry is literally clothed in light as with a garment. Its value has been estimated at $200,000.

Altogether Mrs. Bradley Martin possesses at least $750,000 worth of jewels, many of which have belonged to the most romantic and picturesque queens, princesses and noblewomen of history.

Mrs. Bradley Martin has achieved a tremendous success in England by her jewels, her hospitality, her lavish expenditure and her truly regal way of doing everything. Not one of the multi-millionaire Americans who have established themselves in England makes anything like the impression on British society that Mrs. Martin does.

She has establishments all over the United Kingdom, but her principal one is in Scotland, where her ceremonious mode of life recalls that of the late Queen Victoria, although it is in many respects more magnificent.

The Scotch seat of the Bradley Martins is Balmacaan House in Inverneasshire. Such an army of servants is maintained there that when there is a house party of more than a hundred persons there is a valet or maid for every guest. There are enough gillies or outdoor attendants, to provide one for every man who shoots and leave several dozen to carry the refreshments and do miscellaneous tasks.

The shooting is the finest in Scotland. The Balmacaan deer forest covers 20,000 acres, and there are several hundred fine red deer in it. Then there are 75,000 acres of rigidly preserved grouse and ptarmigan shooting.

The hostess provides all sorts of entertainments with an ease that seems magical. There is a lake on the estate connected with the ocean, and she sends for steamboats at a moment's notice to take her friends for midnight excursions upon the loch, when its suits their fancy. She telegraphs to London for singers like Melba and Caruso, and they come and go away with enormous checks. There is a caravan of road carts and carriages at the command of the arriving and departing guests for the twenty-mile drive to the railway station.

Those who are accustomed to the great country house parties given in England declare that for comfort and luxury combined Mrs. Martin's entertainments have never been excelled.

The arrival of Mrs. Bradley Martin herself, at her Scottish seat, is a very impressive occurrence. Her appearance at the pier head on the Caledonian Canal, is the signal for loud and prolonged cheering. School children line the road to the mansion, flags and bunting float in the breeze and Mrs. Martin, who sits on a high cushion in her carriage, like the late Queen Victoria, bows graciously to all.

"Then, after that, every question I asked, instead of answering it like a weakness asked him to help him aberration as well as he could and departed. He knew where to find his brother and did so without losing any time. The argument that followed between the twins was preceded by an athletic contest, partly on Marquis of Queensberry and partly on Graeco-Roman rules, but mostly without any rules at all. At the conclusion of the exercise brother Calvin, from the floor, promised brother Alvin, who was sitting upon brother Calvin's chest, that he would keep away from Miss Scott altogether and never pretend he was Alvin, except with the latter's permission.

Probably he would have kept his promise, but Alvin in a moment of weakness asked him to help him get in a little deception of his fiance.

Alvin wanted to join an automobile party without Miss Scott's knowledge. In order to do this he would have to see her home first, which would take too long. It occurred to him that if he could dodge into a saloon for a minute his twin brother could walk out in his place and escort her while he hurried to the waiting automobile.

Both twins happened to be dressed in frock coats and trousers that looked exactly alike. Calvin promised over the telephone to come out of a certain saloon as soon as the brother entered it.

While waiting for Alvin to appear Calvin fortified himself with several drinks, though he had already had several others before his brother telephoned.

At last Alvin burst into the saloon, leaving his fiance outside. He expected to have a few minutes' talk with his twin brother before sending him out. But Calvin merely chuckled. "All right Al," and staggered out.

To Miss Scott it seemed that a most disagreeable miracle had come to pass. Apparently she saw a perfectly sober man stick his head into a saloon and a second later emerge drunk.

Alvin had his ride, but next day he was compelled to sign the pledge, though, as a matter of fact, he had never been a drinking man.

The wedding day approached, preliminary preparations had been made and the bride's trousseau had been made ready. Lastly the invitations were still in the hands of the engraver when Alvin found that his fiance's fortune was no more. At once he saw that matrimony would be an impossible luxury under the circumstances, but he had not the courage to tell the young woman. He did, however, stop the invitations from being mailed and talked vaguely about opposition of his "wealthy relatives" which would make an elopement necessary.

At last he put the unpleasant job of breaking the news upon brother Calvin, who is nearly an hour younger than his twin, and under considerable obligation to the elder Thomas.

Calvin rebelled at the idea, but finally accepted it.

As before, he fortified himself with many drinks. Strong drink brings out the affectionate side of Calvin's nature, while at the same time his natural caution is strangled. The result was that Calvin, arriving on the day set for the wedding, could not bear to hurt Miss Scott's feelings by telling her the truth at the start.

As he conversed, the truth seemed more and more impossible and the girl more and more desirable.

Before he realized it, they were eloping in their evening clothes. A little later they were married and on their honeymoon.

Next morning Calvin telephoned his anxious brother who was hiding in Chicago.

"Did you fix it?" shouted Alvin.

"Sure thing," said Calvin.

"Thank Heaven! Did she make any trouble?"

"Not a bit, just told me a minute ago that this is the happiest day of her life."

"You don't say—how on earth did you fix it?"

"Married her myself; you don't mind, do you? She doesn't know the difference and I don't dare tell her."

For two years the Calvin Thomases lived together without the wife knowing that she had married the wrong man. He seemed a different person after marriage, and she was disappointed and unhappy. At last he became neglectful.

Once she made a scene with her husband for his supposed conduct with another woman. Poor Calvin knew it was his brother whom she had seen, but he dared not say so.

Last August things came to an end with a crash. Calvin told his wife and his brother that he would be out of town for a couple of days. Yet that very evening he walked into the house, briefly explaining to her that he had changed his mind.

Somehow he looked different to her, more as he did in the courting days. More surprising still, he had an entirely different manner. He was attentive, thoughtful and affectionate. She felt her old love that had died of his neglect come to life, and with tears she threw herself into his arms.

He was kissing her tenderly and promising never to neglect her again, when the door was thrown open and a perfect duplicate of her husband stood in the doorway.

She gazed from one to the other in bewilderment. Then the figure in the doorway spoke to the other:

"You infernal scoundrel, I'll kill you for this," and seizing a chair he rushed for his image, who was sitting speechless beside Mrs. Thomas.

"Hold on, Cal," he said, rising to meet the attack. "I was only joking and wasn't going to do any harm."

Then followed another battle between the twins. After it was over Mrs. Thomas learned the whole truth. She ordered the bruised and battered twins to leave the house and never see her again.

Now she is suing for divorce in the Edgar County Circuit Court.

A relative of the deceived bride tried to collect volunteers to tar and feather one or both of the brothers. Two men listened to the tale of grievance and then one said:

"Yes, I would help you lynch them, only it's so blamed funny I couldn't keep my face straight long enough to do it."

The process server had his troubles over the twins, too. When he came to serve the papers upon Calvin he found the two twins together, and couldn't tell which to serve them upon. At last he handed them to one of the grinning twins and returned to Mrs. Thomas's lawyer, who groaned and sent him back with a double set of papers to serve on both at the same time to make sure.

Do Modern Girls Marry for Love?

POETICALLY and literally woman is the nation's most valuable asset.

"Oh, those English mothers!" was Napoleon's eloquent remark, as he watched the legions vainly striving to swamp a stubborn square of British soldiers. Yet, if many modern writers are to be believed, women are degenerating in some of their finest traditional qualities.

They do not, for one thing, it is asserted, regard marriage as so sacred a compact—they have become adepts at angling for and hooking husbands on the get-married-at-any-price principle. It is an open secret between them that they decline, if possible, to be "left on the shelf." In other words, love has become quite a secondary consideration so long as there is a nice wedding.

Is it so? No! The average girl of today, while necessarily more independent and vastly better informed than her grandmother, is as womanly and delicate in her attitude toward the opposite sex as the woman of any known age. The fact that wooing and wedding have developed a greater elasticity in recent years does not imply that it has become a mere artificial business. The average modern girl does marry for love, and love alone.

It means this: the cup has to be filled to its proper owners, and not flung indiscriminately at the age as common to all. There are women in plenty who, now that some of the reserve between the sexes has been removed, have taken every advantage of the freedom. They spare no feminine cleverness in bringing a husband into the net. Love, with all its tender beauty, has no meaning for them. They simply cast their net and scoop out the most eligible life partners from the meshes. It is a great, exciting game. But into its artificial atmosphere the average modern girl never enters. On the contrary, she is gloriously free from the taint. "Heart" is at the base of her life's one romance.

There is but a Jack for every Jill—and, come to that, not a Jill for every Jack. There may be secret yearnings in the minds of women whose twin soul has never happened along; but, all the same, the average girl of to-day still asks to be loved for herself alone. She recognizes that her one chance of future happiness hinges upon the sincerity of the halo about her wedding.

She may have blossomed out into distinctly modern types admittedly attractive to the "sterner" sex—the Summer girl, the seaside maiden and so on. But these types have found approval in all but the eyes of suspicious misanthropes. She has only enhanced her chance to be loved for herself alone.

WHO IS THE GIRL?

The Embarrassing Royal Love Romance of an American Heiress Whose Parents Command Secrecy Till Her Merely "Noble" Suitor Proves in the Roman Courts That He Is Half-Brother to Victor Emmanuel, King of Italy.

ROME, Sept. 14.

PERHAPS F. Marion Crawford, author of "Saracinesca," will make this strange, true story the theme of his next novel dealing with modern Roman society. At present it sounds like Victor Hugo in collaboration with Mr. Bernard Shaw.

Imagine a scene like this: In a palace hired for the season by a rich American, when other guests at a ball are departed the handsome young Count Ercolani is on his knees before the rich American's daughter and heiress. She gives him her hand, ah, more—extra kisses, and a save to him.

"Yes, Count Ercolani, I love you. I cannot deny it."

"Ah!" sighs the happy nobleman, "then I may no longer keep my great secret. I am not Count Ercolani—that is, I am more, much more."

"More?" says the startled girl.

"Yes, I am half brother to the King of Italy. King Humbert was my father as well as his."

More astonished girl.

Yes, I am half brother to the King of Italy. King Humbert was my father as well as his!

He has told her all, of course. She reasons him to her mother, whose name is Marguerite, and tells a Roman society reporter reluctantly considering out to print he is the story.

Here's the tale as told. There is talk of a Count Ercolani. He is not a bad name for King Humbert and for his son, against the Austrians. He has a daughter, a marquise, a child, a princess named Margherita, a name that is only a few syllables of Italy. They are most interested of the fortunes of their house ready for that voice.

There is a convent in Rome and the young girl takes up the duties of a sister. King Humbert and son are the royal servants. Suddenly the King is seized with desire to honor the old house which followed. He visits the Ercolani and at the sacrifice of royalty a bridge of a golden fleece springs up on what are been the desert of the lonely.

Mother and Babe Face Death.

Departs the King and thereafter the girl deserving sings but little. There is one born, a boy. He is sick and later on the mother becomes both with death.

"It is the King's weeps the girl. She is not only a queen."

There ensues a story of royal wooing, of glamour and of quick passion.

It is not long the earlier of the court. Ercolani dies broken and crushed beneath the weight of the royal whim.

Before he dies he makes one last request. He takes the boy, the child of his daughter and the princess, and places him as his son by another woman. He begs him, and making him the heir to the estate and title. Also it spares shame at the expense of his whose life had been child to one of illicit relations.

But before he makes out of his head he exacts a promise. The need of the king is not to be known. The station is to rest where it is. The father must not be named. He dies, as I am told, officially also King Humbert.

So runs the record of the mother's romance the Countess Ercolani.

In pride and secrecy and care the countess brought up her son. He knows nothing of his secret of his birth. He is educated as most of the young nobles of Italy are educated at their sector. In fact he is quite charming, good to see.

When he came of age he secret to tell him by his mother the whole story of the royal wall that wrecked Rome and killed his grandfather, the promise, all of it.

And now comes the comedy, for part I am told. Bernard Shaw might delight in the sect.

She Appeals to the Roman Courts.

Suddenly the civil courts at Rome are astounded by a suit brought before it by the Countess Ercolani to have declared officially the paternity of the son, to have written down imperatively on the records that he is the son of King Humbert. She asks the permission to use the prerogative of the royal house. For such have the laws of the civil caution. For nearly a quarter of a century the thing has lain oldest. Why? ask the courts. The Countess Ercolani has her story. It is not the property that she seeks, she says. She has deep very well without that and will continue to do so. It is the name of the father of her son that she wishes proved before the world.

But why, asked these courts, may no breaking of the seal of a royal house's name? Why not? It is not necessary that she should have the courts vex the Countess Ercolani.

Some few years ago a perplexed question was there. It is known that King Humbert was much in love with Elena Zarre, the jeweller's daughter, and his wife and most the royal side of the throne. Quietly, without scandal, Elena Petrini, these have been plots of forces to prove to harm their heritage. But in this matter comes a good of a royal family from the Queen Mother Margarita and from Victor Emmanuel. The case should not be considered, they say.

"Blackmail," says the Queen Mother.

"They would have my father the father of all his people," storms Victor Emmanuel.

However, the appeal has been made and discreetly the case is taken up. Very much sub rosa it all is, but a carefully guarded paragraph does somehow creep out in a newspaper of Rome. It travels to Milan and to Paris where the Dreyfus affair is known. As it goes, like a nugget it attracts particles of fact and semi-fact. Now what started out so barely is well clothed as a history.

Two summers ago there came to Rome, say those informed ones of that city, of Milan and of Paris, a very rich American family. There was Anna, who didn't particularly care when he got back to the States, but who, as he is known for promising future, and who is beautiful, daughter of the world's richest man. She was with Atchison and with thought of nothing else.

Just why they are in Rome is not exactly known, even. From Chicago, Milan, Paris, it is said that the family came from the West. Apparently the aid to of the Count was to keep a secret for twenty-five years, when it was allowed to be told.

At any rate the Count Cesare Humberto met the beautiful American girl. It is probable that mystery appeals to the heart feminine and there was much of mystery about the Count. It is probable that the Countess could be and I would atmosphere was most alluringly thick. Daughter fell prostrate and violently in love with him.

Now, what mamma I do not keep too posted with the suitor for her daughters were high, it was a fact that a Count, an Ercolani at that, poor of course but with many quarterings, was not to be taken lightly. The Count could make himself very pleasant also, and although the question had not been asked, there was little of it guessed. [illegible]

Give Me Back My Baby That You Borrowed!

"Go Away, Mrs. Tomlin," said Mr. Rowlee, "He's My Baby Boy, Born While I Was in England."

"NO!" Says Alice Francis, the Baby's Nurse, "It's My Own Child, and Mrs. Rowlee Is Its Grandmother!"

And the Oregon Courts Must Decide Which of These Three "Mothers" Is the Real Mother.

"Your baby!" exclaimed Mr. Rowlee, clasping his boy to his breast, "there is only one baby in this house, and, thank God, it is our own. We do not have to 'borrow' babies."

"I have called to get my baby," said Mrs. Tomlin, "my baby which your wife borrowed of me two years ago and refuses to return."

H[illegible] Rowlee, an Englishman by birth, is superintendent of the Deschutes Irrigation and Power Company, of Oregon. He makes his home in Portland, Ore., with his wife and child. Two and a half years ago he made a visit of three months to the old country on important business.

When Mr Rowlee returned to his home in Portland he was delighted at the much-longed-for, but totally unexpected arrival of a fine fat baby.

"Why didn't you cable when—when you first knew about it?" stammered the dazed but happy father.

"I wanted to give you a joyful surprise," said his wife. "I do and I had remained so long disappointed."

Mr. Rowlee was so happy that he quite forgot to question his wife any further

This advent of a fine blue-eyed boy made a change[illegible] life got home earlier evenings from his office eager to have a romp with the baby before its bedtime. He brought a photographer to the house when the baby was three months old so that he could have a photograph of his boy on his desk while he worked.

Mr. Rowlee's happiness naturally made his wife even more happy. Even earlier than most mothers do she developed a passion for finding resemblances between the immature features of the infant and those of its father. This got to be a regular programme in the evenings after dinner, as the baby was put through the various stages of play and preparation for bed.

"Look, Frank, his blessed little nose is the very image of his papa's."

"By love, that's so. But he has your round chin, my dear."

"Chins don't count as noses do. And eyes! Look at his eyes."

"Bluer than mine, dear. My eyes are grey, with only a hint of blue in them."

"But at his age, darling, yours were as blue as his. Blue eyes nearly always turn greenish as one reaches maturity, and, um, baby's eyes are far apart, just like yours, and set in his little head in the same way."

"Well, well, I believe you are right, my dear. His little tow head is already darker. Mark my word, he'll have hair exactly the color of yours, darling, when he's fifteen."

"You mustn't give me all the credit, dear. He's got your pretty, plump hands."

Whereat Mrs. Rowlee would laugh heartily and reply:

"How like a man! Aren't all babies' hands plump? But look at the way he curls his left thumb under his fingers—exactly as you do, dear. Oh, he's his papa's little man!"

And Mrs. Rowlee would tickle the baby to make it laugh, "like his papa," and pretend to scold him, to make him look sulky, "like his papa," and would do and say a hundred more or less silly things by way of convincing the already happy and convinced Mr. Rowlee that he had a son in his very image.

When the boy was a year old Mrs. Rowlee was eager to plan his whole future. He should be a big man of affairs like his papa.

"I always wanted to be a lawyer, my dear. Let's have a justice of the Supreme Court in the family."

"Oh, but lawyers have such a hard time in the beginning—no clients, and all sorts of temptations to go wrong."

"Not this little lawyer," said Mr. Rowlee. "We'll give him the finest education, and when he's admitted to the bar we'll set him up in a handsome office all lined with law books, and give him an income that will keep him like a gentleman till clients come of their own accord."

But Mrs. Rowlee couldn't think of depriving her baby to such an uncertain career unless everything was fixed from the very start to make him independent.

"That's all right," said his proud and amiable father. "I'll deed to the little rascal half of my property right now."

"You darling! I knew I'm a foolish woman, but that would make me perfectly easy in my mind—and you can go right ahead with your plans to have a Justice of the Supreme Court in the family."

So Mr Rowlee consulted lawyers, and drew up a deed and signed it conveying to his beloved baby a snug fortune in valuable property.

After that there was a year of unmitigated happiness in the Rowlee family—except that at times Mrs. Rowlee seemed unaccountably worried about something. But mothers always have so many worries that Mr. Rowlee thought little of it.

Then suddenly, a few weeks ago, he received a terrible shock. A woman who was a stranger to him, who said she was Mrs. Sarah Tomlin, called at his house accompanied by a lawyer.

"I have called to get my baby," said Mrs. Tomlin, "my baby which your wife borrowed of me two years ago and refuses to return."

The amazed Mr. Rowlee looked at his wife, who seemed dazed and unable to utter a word.

"Your baby?" exclaimed Mr. Rowlee, clasping his boy to his breast, "there is only one baby in this house, and, thank God, it is our own. We do not have to 'borrow' babies."

LITTLE CARLTON ROWLEE, THE BABY IN THE CASE.

"You call 'your' baby 'Carlton Rowlee.' It's name is William Dudley Tomlin, and I am his mother."

Now the lawyer held up his hand warningly—as Mr. Rowlee seemed on the point of exploding with anger, and asked:

"Why did your wife send away the baby's nurse, Alice Francis, who was a ward of the Juvenile Court, and cause her to be placed in the disorderly house of Dorothy Darlington?"

"Leave my house!" thundered Mr. Rowlee, "that is my answer to blackmailers."

It is not yet known what conversation then ensued between Mr. and Mrs. Rowlee. But it is evident that she satisfied him that the child was unquestionably their own, for he has remained firm in that attitude.

But soon there was another shock for Mr. Rowlee. Mrs. Tomlin, through her attorney, brought suit to recover possession of "William Dudley Tomlin," and almost simultaneously Mrs. Rowlee was arrested and indicted on the charge of having placed Alice Francis, the child's nurse, in a disreputable house. Mrs. Rowlee was released on bail.

But now the affair had become public. Fearing that his baby boy would be kidnapped, Mr. Rowlee placed him in the home of a friend in the suburbs of Portland. A few days later he saw that he had a hard battle to fight. His friend in the suburbs telephoned to him:

"Come and get the child. It seems to me there is something wrong in this affair."

A newspaper had published an interview with Alice Francis, in which she added new complications, saying in effect:

"That baby is not Mrs. Rowlee's. Neither is it Mrs. Tomlin's. It is my own child, and Mrs. Rowlee is its grandmother. When I had nursed it for eight months in the Rowlee house Mrs. Rowlee sent me away."

When the whole matter is brought to trial everything seems to indicate that several family skeletons will be dragged into the light of day. In the meantime Mrs. Tomlin has told for publication this remarkable story:

"I am very sorry that this trouble has become public. I do not desire any notoriety, neither do I want to be placed in the light of attempting to kidnap my own baby. It my plan to take him had ended all right it could not have been called kidnapping.

"When my baby was born, in April, 1905, Mrs. Rowlee came down from Bend, Ore., and told me that if I would let her take him she would not only give him a good home but would secure for him all Mr. Rowlee's property. She told me he was an Englishman, a man of peculiar temperament, and would leave all his property to the child.

"I had to work for a living, and I let her take him, believing this would be the best for the boy. It was in June, when he was about six weeks old, that she took him away.

"Since then I have been informed by Mrs. Rowlee that her husband has deeded all his property to the boy, which he will get a part of at 21 years of age, if Mr. Rowlee is yet living, and the remainder at Mr. Rowlee's death. If Mr. Rowlee dies, I understand the boy is to get everything.

"Mrs. Rowlee has endeavored to get me to relinquish all claim to my son, so that she and Mr Rowlee may adopt him. I believe this would legalize the transfer of the property to the child. When I refused she said they would keep him anyhow, and then I grew angry and, well, you know the rest."

It is denied by Mr. Rowlee that his wife is responsible for the placing of Alice Francis in Dorothy Darlington's house.

"Carlton Rowlee is my own boy," he says, "and I know what I am talking about. Of Mrs Tomlin's story, I have nothing to say. Alice Francis nursed my boy for eight months from August, 1905, to April, 1906. She now claims that Mrs. Rowlee is her mother and that she herself is the mother of my boy. These things can not be shown to be false, I have not the slightest fear of the outcome."

Mrs. Tomlin's lawyers are very busy getting ready to prove in court that their client, being then a very poor working woman, loaned her baby to Mrs. Rowlee while the latter's husband was away from home.

It is their theory that Mrs. Rowlee hoped to receive her husband into believing that the boy born during his absence was their own child, thereby, through the son and heir materially bettering her own financial situation and prospects.

The strange charge of Alice Francis that she was driven away by Mrs Rowlee because she was the real, natural mother of the child, and herself the daughter of Mrs. Rowlee, makes a separate case, embarrassing to both sides in the Tomlin-Rowlee suit.

Perhaps the strangest feature of the whole strange tangle is Mrs Rowlee's [illegible] sincere—unless it is Mr. Rowlee's firm refusal to believe that his wife hoodwinked him.

The baby boy is still in the custody of the Rowlees. What astonishing revelations the forthcoming trials of both cases will bring forth in the cause of excited speculations all over the State of Oregon.

Becoming Styles for Tall, Thin Women.

THE true secret of dressing well, in the eyes of those who are of [illegible] proportions, lies in dress[illegible] ostentatiously, and the same rule—to a certain extent—holds good in the case of those whose height is not balanced by a corresponding breadth.

For such a figure Dame Fashion must modify her latest whim, subdue the most recent vagary as regards cut and colors, as these restrictions—which would be devoid of character and produce an impression of mediocrity in women of average size—only lend up to and accentuate the good points of one who can lay claim to more than the allotted stature.

Perpendicular stripes, which add length where length is needed, are anathema to the woman who is as slight as she is tall, but cross-striped effects are always permissible, especially when the stripes are neither too broad nor too definite.

Dark shades are better than light. White and cream should be shunned as much as possible, both for day and evening wear, while the tall woman is hardly likely to look so well in anything as in an all-black costume.

Basqued coats or redingotes are always becoming to her, while sack or semi-sack coats of full or three-quarter length may safely be adopted. Bolero and Eton jackets should be severely left alone, but short capes of ample proportions belong almost exclusively to the tall, graceful and slender woman with sloping shoulders, the new fashionable pelerines and the capes of long-haired fur, which would dwarf a short stature and counteract the silhouette of a short and stout woman, being ideal from the point of view of a long, slender figure.

Skirts should always be lavishly trimmed at the foot in horizontal lines, but a superabundance of frills—especially in evening attire—should be avoided, as this lends to give an overmasculine effect.

Exaggeratedly short skirts should be eschewed if possible, and, although skirts fitting closely over the hips and provided with a substantial flare round the foot are occasionally suitable, great care should be exercised in hitting a good medium, the "extreme" long skirt, which almost lies in folds over the feet, and which gives such a lengthening appearance to the woman of tiny proportions, producing the same effect where it is not required.

WHY PRETTY CHILDREN GROW UP PLAIN

A SCIENTIFIC AND PHILOSOPHIC INQUIRY INTO A CURIOUS AND DISTURBING ASPECT OF THE ETERNAL QUESTION OF BEAUTY.

HOW PRETTY NOSES CHANGE INTO BEAKS, LARGE EYES INTO PIGGISH ONES AND ROSEBUD MOUTHS INTO INDESCRIBABLE ENORMITIES.

All women desire beauty, and within moderation it is a reasonable desire. Yet, strange though they deliberately throw away that which they most desire. A little observation will convince anybody that there is an enormous number of ugly girls and children, not to speak of those who, that relatively few of those who grow up to be pretty or beautiful women.

Why is all this beauty lost? Madame Paola Lombroso, a kinswoman of the great Italian student of psychiatry and herself a student of psychological problems, undertakes to answer the question. Her article contains many suggestions that will interest and perhaps be useful to women.

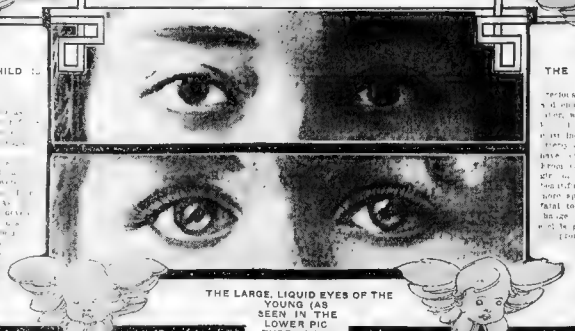
THE SWEET, SOULFUL EXPRESSION OF A LOVELY CHILD IS LOST IN THE BONY PROFILE OF AN ADULT.

THE CHARMING RETROUSSE NOSE OF THE CHILD GROWS INTO A TRUMPET OR A BEAK.



THE LARGE, LIQUID EYES OF THE YOUNG (AS SEEN IN THE LOWER PICTURE) LOSE THEIR BEAUTY MORE THAN ANY OTHER FEATURE APPEARING RELATIVELY SMALL AND DULL IN THE MATURE.

As regards the mouth, again, the child has ... her great advantage over the adult. ... The lips which close the mouth are ... formed of a soft, spongy, fibrous tissue, to ... which the activity of inferior bodily ex... changes and the flow of blood give its ... characteristic ... activity and that ... In ... fancy the exchange is particularly ... d and rapid, and the color of the in... face's lips, which resemble the deep red ... pulp of some luscious fruit, is entirely due ... to the abundant supply of rich blood.

The mouth, moreover, is an organ being ... continually used. We are always doing ... something with our mouths—chewing, eating, drinking, speaking, laughing, kissing, ... and like everything which is much used the ... mouth naturally shows signs of wear. The ... adult's mouth must fatally bear the stamp ... of long service. Hence the many mouths ... we see marked with loose sensual, or ... greedy lines, which rob the face of every ... vestige of spirituality.

In most cases the infant happily finds ... nothing but enchantment and happiness in ... life. Its periods of grief are rare and ... short. With the adult, on the contrary, ... the fierce struggle for existence, ... patience to succeed, distrust, disdain, ... tempt, cynicism—all these ... tions of the soul which are given visible ... expression to by the different forms of the ... mouth—leave upon that organ their indelible ... mark and thus destroy the lines of its ... beauty.

Those adults who preserve something of ... childish beauty are found almost exclusively ... in the richer classes. Infants are ... tiful in all classes. As the poet has said, "Tous les rires d'enfant ont les mêmes ... deux fossettes."

If we take a hundred girls of twenty years of age from the working classes of Europe and a hundred from the well-to-do ... we shall find that the probabilities of ... beauty are proportionately as four is to six, ... that is to say, if there are six pretty girls ... the rich contingent there will be no more ... than four in the other. Moreover, by the ... time the four poorer girls reach thirty the ... probability is that not more than one of ... the four will still have any marks of ... beauty, at the same age it is equally probable that not more than one of the richer ... girls will have to lament the loss of her ... charms. At the age of forty it is idle to ... think of finding one pretty woman what... ever ... among the well-to-do classes.

Because it, in fact, a delicate, fragile ... that will be required to be surrounded with ... every ... luxurious exercise, sport, ... leisure, nourishing food, proper rest, ... visits to the country, attractions of every ... kind, as well as those ... pleasures ... which keep the heart young—all these are

To these ... women every gesture, ... the rhythm ... of ... movements ... captivate by their manner of holding a ... tennis racquet or lifting up the ... of their dresses. They have ... these same ... gestures and movements repeated again and ... again in their own ... .

To conclude: a child of ... ungraceful ... aspect, holding out apparently ... such promise for the future, will ... suddenly blossom forth into radiant beauty, whereas, on the other hand, those who seem to hold out the most bright ... have often proved ... wretched bankrupts before ... years have passed over their heads. This fragility of beauty, distributed as if by the ... caprice of some fairy, ought surely to ... those who happen to possess it more ... modest.

ARE THESE REALLY THE BONES OF PRETTY POCAHONTAS?

Remarkable Controversy Over a Strange Collection of Bones Found Near the English Church Where the Famous Indian Princess Was Buried.

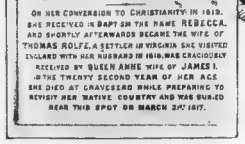
PORTRAIT OF POCAHONTAS NEWLY DISCOVERED AT KING'S LYNN, NORFOLK, ENGLAND, BELIEVED TO HAVE BEEN PAINTED FROM LIFE.

POCAHONTAS, FROM AN ANCIENT PORTRAIT IN VIRGINIA.



This Stone Commemorates
PRINCESS POCAHONTAS or METOAKA
DAUGHTER OF THE MIGHTY AMERICAN INDIAN CHIEF POWHATTAN.
GENTLE AND HUMANE, SHE WAS THE FRIEND OF THE EARLIEST STRUGGLING ENGLISH COLONISTS WHOM SHE NOBLY RESCUED, PROTECTED, AND HELPED.
ON HER CONVERSION TO CHRISTIANITY IN 1613, SHE RECEIVED IN BAPTISM THE NAME REBECCA, AND SHORTLY AFTERWARDS BECAME THE WIFE OF THOMAS ROLFE, A SETTLER IN VIRGINIA. SHE VISITED ENGLAND WITH HER HUSBAND IN 1616, WAS CRADIOUSLY RECEIVED BY QUEEN ANNE WIFE OF JAMES I.
IN THE TWENTY SECOND YEAR OF HER AGE SHE DIED AT GRAVESEND WHILE PREPARING TO REVISIT HER NATIVE COUNTRY AND WAS BURIED NEAR THIS SPOT ON MARCH 21ST 1617.

HEROIC RESCUE OF CAPTAIN JOHN SMITH FROM CERTAIN DEATH BY THE PRINCESS POCAHONTAS.

RECENT DISCOVERY OF THE BONES, SUPPOSED TO BE THOSE OF POCAHONTAS, IN AN OLD GRAVEYARD NEAR THE CHURCH WHERE THE MEMORIAL TABLET STANDS.

H[illegible] mystery [illegible] solved at last? [illegible] is now exciting [illegible] women. It [illegible] of especial interest [illegible] Jamestown Exposition is being held, [illegible] Pocahontas had [illegible] married [illegible] Smith [illegible] cowpunchers of her [illegible] the South [illegible] When it was, and [illegible] Spandar was, I have spread up there before the Smith family.

They have found [illegible] and the remains of a human skeleton [illegible] St. George's Church, at Gravesend, in England, where Pocahontas is recorded as having been buried. But the position of the tablet does not agree with the record of the parish register, and therefore arises the controversy.

The record of the death of Pocahontas in the ancient parish register of St. George reads as follows:

"1616, March 21st. Rebecca Wolfe, wyfe of Thomas Wolfe, gentleman, a lady borne, was buried in the chancell."

This plainly indicates the place of burial, but no one actually knows that Pocahontas beneath the chancel and recently some bones have been discovered [illegible] mile away from St. George's church, an old burying ground called St. Mary's, which bones show considerable evidence that they really are those of Pocahontas. They are those of a woman and apparently an Indian, and Pocahontas was the only Indian woman in England at that time. The graveyard was in use [illegible] accompanied by many small relics, such as beads, which might have belonged to an Indian woman. The position of the bones so far away from the church is accounted for by the fact that it was [illegible] smallpox, of which there was an epidemic at the time, and those [illegible] desired to keep the remains [illegible] the fashionable and crowded churchyard of St. Mary's burying ground, adjacent to St. George's at that time.

The workmen who discovered the bones were excavating [illegible] a new building [illegible] A man digging a hole came upon what at first he took to be [illegible] With [illegible] his pick struck against it and the resulting blow drove a hole in it. Then he [illegible] the object up and found it was a human skeleton. The earth was [illegible] in the immediate vicinity, and the entire skeleton was brought to [illegible] was a few yards to the west of the path which runs through the churchyard, and the body had been [illegible] with the feet to the east and [illegible] a very old burial.

Mr. Hotter, [illegible] Hotter was seen in charge of the work [illegible] was told of the discovery and remarked jocularly, "Got Lucy P. Johnston." Mr. Tucker, founder of Jamestown Exposition, [illegible] a friend of Mr. Hotter, was a believer in phrenology and to him Mr. Hotter presented the find. But the skeleton lay for more than a week at [illegible] before the request of the [illegible] gift finally received [illegible] requests from Mr. Hotter to [illegible] "take the confounded thing away."

Mr. Tucker, as soon as he had made a casual examination, decided that the skull was that of an Indian and forthwith took it to London and called on a famous archaeologist.

"It is the skull of a woman," said the man, "and she was undoubtedly an Indian woman."

[illegible] the best list of [illegible] great chief [illegible] to [illegible] to [illegible] of [illegible] English colony in Virginia [illegible] Powhatan [illegible] has explored [illegible] ever [illegible] to spare [illegible] a life [illegible] the [illegible] a [illegible]

THE PUZZLING PATHS

BY SAM LOYD

IN this odd little puzzle the farmer shown in the picture crosses the field and goes out through gate No. 1. The dog passes out of gate No. 2, and the cow passes out of gate No. 3, yet neither of the paths they take cross one another.

Can you show us the paths each took to get out of their respective gates without crossing one another?

Among those of our clever puzzlists who send in the correct answer to this little problem we will distribute 1,000 of the Sam Loyd wonderful Puzzle Books, which contain the finest collection of puzzles and tricks ever published.

How Many Boys Like This—

Make One Boy Like This?

CHILE picture at the top of this page tells its own story. A tiresome story, you may say. Yes, it IS tiresome, the same old story of child labor, child slavery, that you have seen in this newspaper over and over again.

If you are tired of it, we are sorry. But you will see it here many and many a time HEREAFTER. For it is a thing that should be talked about and must be talked about as long as the shame shall last

There was much talking about grown-up slavery, much very tiresome talking before that ended. But men DID put an end to it.

Child labor, child slavery, exists. The slavery of children is more shameful than any slavery of grown men

There are hundreds of thousands of children shut in every day from the fresh air and the sunlight, made for them. Thousands of them die, and that is murder. Other thousands of them are stunted, cheated of their chance in life, and that is even worse than murder, for it is slow torture

There are men owning mills, factories and mines in which children are literally ground up into dollars.

The men who put in their pockets the money that represents the destruction of children have children of their own—fat-cheeked and healthy—as all children ought to be. It is difficult to understand how such men can go from the mill where they destroy the children of others to their own homes and look upon their own children with any comfort.

But they do it, and it is the business of the general public to put an end to their system of fattening their children on the thin bodies of the children of other people.

We know by studying the records of child labor and of brutality to children how hard it is to awake public sentiment how hard it is to MAKE THE PEOPLE CARE

In England, children six years old and even younger were sent up narrow chimney flues to clean them. They were caught in the flues and suffocated to death. They were brutally beaten by their masters. It was shown in the discussion in Parliament that fires were lighted at the bottom of the chimneys beneath these wretched children to force them to climb more energetically. As they went up the chimneys the soles of their feet were pricked, and burning paper was held against them

It is hard to believe now that such things could have happened. It is hard to believe that those children should be taken time after time dead out of the flues and the public remain passive.

But it DID happen. It took years of struggle. It took the life-long, devoted effort of the noble-hearted Earl of Shaftesbury to rescue these wretched little chimney-sweeps from their horrible lives. When the thing was done, when those that had made their money by killing the chimney sweeps were compelled to use machinery, when it was forbidden absolutely to put a child under any circumstances into a chimney, THE WORLD WENT ON AS BEFORE, THE CHIMNEY-SWEEP BOSSES, MADE MONEY AS BEFORE. They used machines of iron and of bristles instead of the tender flesh of children. And then people wondered why they hadn't stopped it long ago

Do you imagine that the things we allow in mills, mines and factories, in this country, are any less brutal than the treatment of those little chimney-sweeps in England in the last century? Not at all. Whether you choke a child suddenly with the soot and smoke of a chimney, or whether you choke that child in the course of four or five years with bad air, no sunlight—IT COMES TO THE SAME THING.

The difficulty is for us to REALIZE that which we do not see every day. Or, when we do see it every day, to realize its brutality

We print this picture to remind the people of the United States (WHO ARE RESPONSIBLE) of the fact that there are to-day thousands of men who overwork and destroy the children of others to keep their own children fat. We write to remind you that the work which is done by children, killing those children, COULD be done by machinery if the people who control the country would forbid the use of the children.

There are thousands of boys wearing out their lives on coal breakers. They pick out the hard, sharp pieces of slate. Their nails are worn down to the quick, their lungs are black with the thick coal dust that they must breathe. Their backs are tired, their bodies wear out. THE WORK THEY DO COULD BE DONE BY MACHINERY, BUT THE MACHINERY IS MORE EXPENSIVE. It is the business of the public, YOUR BUSINESS, to compel those that work the children to work machinery instead.

Each man who reads this may ask, "What can I do?"

EVERY man can do something. He can talk to the man who asks for his vote. He can talk to his friends, he can stir up dissatisfaction, promote agitation. Public opinion in the end is the power that wins. Child slavery will end when the people determine that it SHALL end.

CHARACTER---That Is the Man

Character—We Can Control It

The Man Is What His Character Makes Him or What He Makes His Character

HOW many times we all use the word character, and how rarely we think seriously about it. The servant leaving wants a "good character." The actor has "a character part," often with very little REAL character in it. One person solemnly says of another: "I can't understand his character at all." The individual described in a book we call the character of the book. We speak of the letters that we print, or write, as characters. And the word character is an excellent one for our written letters, since so much of our characters, strong, weak, slovenly or precise, is written in those little characters that come from our pen

That is an OLD word, engraved on the rock in this picture. The Greeks used it, having constructed it out of their word, "Charasso," meaning engrave. A very interesting derivation for the word, for truly character is that thing which is engraved upon a man by his own life, and by all the lives that have preceded his here. A man's character is an engraving. And that engraving is the real man.

The important work of human beings since the Greeks developed their marvellous characters, beginning thirty centuries back, and for a hundred centuries before Greece was ever heard of, HAS BEEN THE FORMING, THE ENGRAVING OF CHARACTERS.

All changes in civilization, all important improvements in men, have been changes in character, changes in the engraving that time and thought and struggle have put upon man's brain.

There is no room on this page to do more than call YOUR attention to this picture as one that may be useful to boys or girls, or very young men in your homes. You may help them by showing them the picture and talking to them about it

Character is man's rock of safety, and his ONLY rock, in this world If his character is strong, the waves of misfortune, of criticism, of undeserved public contempt, will beat against it in vain.

We know that our characters make us what we are. The question is, WHAT CAN WE DO TO MAKE OUR CHARACTERS? Can the coward make himself brave? Perhaps not, since courage, as we commonly understand it, is so often the question of nerve or the absence of nerves

The coward cannot change his character by making himself brave, perhaps, but HE CAN DO IT IN ANOTHER WAY—by doing what he knows he ought to do whether he is afraid or not.

Every man knows in his own heart what his character is, or he CAN know, if he will study himself alone, and without self-deception

Every man can know how he would feel if he were the man standing on that rock.

Every man knows where his character is weak, and although some of the world's great men have said that character cannot be changed, or made better, we believe that it can; THAT IT IS DONE EVERY DAY.

The man who is irregular can force himself into regularity

The man or woman vacillating, changing, can cultivate decision, develop a faculty for reaching a conclusion and sticking to it

Somebody wrote a line often quoted with admiration, which reads "Lord of myself, that heritage of woe."

That is a fine-sounding line, but an inaccurate one The man who is lord of himself, who has character and can control himself, is not the possessor of a "heritage of woe." He is in possession of the most valuable thing a man can have—a thinking mind on an interesting world, and the power to control and direct it

We believe that parents can do a great deal for children by talking to them about character, not only seeking to develop character in the children, but teaching the children to develop their own character

Teach them frankness, honesty with themselves When they can learn not to deceive THEMSELVES, not to blame others for their shortcomings, not to avoid their share of responsibility, they will have a good foundation upon which to build character

"Know yourself," the Greeks wrote across the top of their great temple on the hill. The philosophers and the wise men ever since have been repeating it, "Know yourself." And men will repeat it for many thousands and hundreds of thousands of years after we half-developed creatures shall have left the earth

Character is the complex collection of emotions, the desires and impulses that make up a human being, reunited more or less efficiently by the one noble quantity of humanity which is the sense of JUSTICE

If you build your life character, you are upon a rock that won't be shaken You can build upon a character that puts you above the accidents and weaknesses of the passing hour.

OH, I feel the growing glory
Of our life upon this sphere,
Of the life that like a river
Runs forever and forever,
From the Somewhere to the here.
And still on, and onward flowing,
Leads us out to larger knowing,
Thro' the hidden, to the clear.

Oh, I feel a deep thanksgiving
For the sorrows I have known,
For the worries, and the crosses,
And the grievings, and the losses
That along my path were sown.
Now the great eternal meaning
Of each trouble I am gleaning,
And the harvest is my own.

I am opulent with knowledge
Of the purpose and the Cause,
And I go my way rejoicing
And in singing seek the voicing
Of Love's never-failing laws.
From the Now unto the Yonder,
Full of beauty and of wonder,
Life flows ever, without pause.

And I feel the exaltation
Of a child that loves its play.
Tho' the ranks of friends are thinning,
Still the end is but beginning
Of a larger, fuller day.
And the joy of life is spilling
From my spirit as, all willing,
I go speeding on my way.

Home Dis Morning.

MEIN LIEBER SON, LOOEY—I haf receifed your letter from Washington und ve vas all glad dot you vas diddling so well mit der drummer business.

You ask me in your letter if I recollection der baseball national anthem vich vas wrote some years ago py your Uncle Adolf.

I had only yust der vun copy, Looey, so I ask you should you meet up mit Chonny McGraw or Christy Matchewson or Pop Anson or any of dem young fellows, dem I leave dem haf it.

Dis vas der poetical as it vas manufactured py your Uncle Adolf:

DER EMPIRE.

An Empire of der Big League lay dying, full mit fears,
Dare vas lack of player's nursing, aber nit of player's tears,
But a cop policeman vatched him vile his life's bleed ebbed avay,
Und bent mit pitying glances to hear vot dit he say.
Der dying Empire flitered as he took dot copper's hant,
Und he set, "I nefer more vill see my own, my native lant.
Took a message und a token to some distant friends of mine
For I vas born at Dopeville—at Dopeville down der Line!

"Tell my dear, short-sighted brothers ven der meet und crowd around
To hear my mournful story, dot I brafely held my ground;
Dot I fooled my decisions und I googooed at der mob
All howling for my heart's blood (ours is a fearful chob!)
Full many a kicker, ghastly vite, hard on der ben h i sat
Unif some players sneaked behind und soaked me mit a bat.
Den I quite swift und suttenly vent into a decline,
No more vill I see Dopeville—dear Dopeville down der Line!

"Fell Pulliam his udder sons must comfort his olt age!
Ach! how I luffed to put dis head of mine mitin a cage!
For my father vas an Empire bold, und efen as a child
I am proud mit knowledge
My heart thumped forth to hear him tolt of struggles fierce und vild,
Und ven he died und left us all ve hat to took our choice.
I led dem haf yust vot dey vished, but kept my father's voice.
Und mit hopsh yells I practiced on der leadle olt cat mine
On Sleepy Street in Dopeville—dear Dopeville down der Line!

"Tell my brothers in der pitanese not to stood und hold dear breath
Und vatch dem awful players celebrationing my death.
But to look upon dem proutly, mit a colt und redfish eye
Und fine dem to der limit—as I dit in days gone by;
Und if der players fuss demselfs, and mit deir words eggcelaim.
Yust listen at dem briefleasly und chase dem from der game
For der Empire's rank decisionings must be barked as I barked mine
For der honor of old Dopeville—sweet Dopeville down der Line!"

His voice thumped to a visper; his grasp vas childish weak.
His eyes put on a played out look, his speaker ceased to speak.
Der copper beat to lift him, but chee vas! it vas too late!
Der Empire of der Big League vas ouid—ouid at der plate!
Three strikes py Chuminedy! und he hat no chance to call
Like he used to dit so often. "Say, dot last vun vas a ball!"
Vell, he's gone, I eggsportation, vare der good bine does der tvine,

Mirandy on Comfort in Clothes

By Dorothy Dix

Copyright, 1907, by American Journal-Examiner

"AY JANE," remarked Miranda, "I was readin' 'bout de oddest man, an' sued him in de courts, for callin' him a dude. He said dat bit was a malicious slander on his character, an' pussun, an' dat he was des as tacky an' dat big britches bagged des as much at de knees, an' dat his necktie rid over his collar des as much as anybody else.

"'My lan',' 'sclaims I when I hears dat, 'but right dar's whar you puts yo' finger on de difference between men an' women. Takin' 'em by an' large de male an' de female intellect an' morum averages up 'bout de same, but when hit comes to clothes, an de way dey looks at 'em men an' women is as far apart as de north is from de south.'

"Dat's so,' 'spons Ma'y Jane. 'I ain't never heered of no woman considern' dat she was slandered when folks called her a fashion plate, or said dat she was styly.'

"'Dat she don't,' I grees, 'dere ain't nothin' in dis world dat a woman won't forgive you for tellin' on her quicker dan she will dat she's got on her las' year's dress turned inside out, an' hind part befo', an' dat she trimmed her own hat. She'd a lot rather dat you whispered hit behind yo' hand dat you wondered whar she got de money, an' hoped dat she got hit honest but you has yo' 'spicions, dat she bought dat lace coat wid, dun for you to say dat maybe hit was a imported wrap, lak she say hit is, but dat it looks to you moughty lak hit was made out of dem parlor curtains dat she used to have at de front window, an' dat disappeared 'bout de time de coat showed up.'

A woman,' says Ma'y Jane, 'when she goes to buy a dress tries to git somethin' as different from anybody else's as she can, but when a man starts out to git him some clothes he wants somethin' dat's so much lak ev'y odder man's dat he has to put his name on 'em to know his own. You have to see a man's face in a crowd to tell him, but I can recognize ev'y woman in de congregation at ch'ch by de back of her bonnet.'

"'Don't quarrel wid what is a marcelful dispensation of Providence, my chile,' says I, 'for ef men took de same interest in deir clothes dat we women does in ours, an knowed how much fun hit was to shop, dere wouldn't be no money lef' in de fambly pus' for us to buy lingerie shirt waists wid. Hit's our salvation dat men hates to shop, an' wants to fight when anybody passes em a compliment 'bout bein' a dude.'

"'Thank Gord for clothes,' 'sclaims Ma'y Jane, pleasely, 'for life ain't'y wouldn't be worth livin' widout 'em!'

Amen,' 'spons I.

When a woman's happy,' says Ma'y Jane, 'dat thing she wants to do to celebrate her joy is to go out an' buy somethin', an' ef she's in trouble de fust thing dat she thinks of dat's real consolin' is to put on her bonnet, an' pike out to de store.'

"'Shoppin' is to a woman whut drink is to a man,' 'spons I, 'hit's de bat dat she goes on when she's got to blow off steam or bust.' A puffect lady when things go wrong at home, or she's sort of uplifted by a streak of good luck, or has got some sorrer, can't go out an' drown her feelin's in liquor, so she heads for de department sto's, an' has a round or two wid de bargain counter. Man think dat when women buys things dat dey don't need dat hit's extravagance, when mos' of de time hit ain't nothin' but emotion.

"'Ef you'll take notice, you'll see dat mos' of de women dat wastes dair husband's money in buyin' things dat dey can't afford, an' ain't got no business havin', is women wid a secret sorrer or a blighted ambition, or a husband dat is chasin' odder women.

"'Dere's Sis Sary, dat is gittin' ole, an' fat, an' dat's got three chins an' a back dat looks lak hit was cut after a paper pattern of a rainbow, an' dat dere ain't no mo' encouragement in tryin' to dress up dan dere would be in tryin' to ornament de side of a barn yit she spends all of her time an money a-footlotin' bit after de latest thing in de fashions. Wharfors does she do dat? Because she's lonesome. Her husband is dat busy makin' money dat he ain't got no time to think 'bout nothin' an' nobody else, an' Sis Sary ain't got no children to keep her busy an' so she buys things for company.

"'Furdemo', hit's been nigh on to thirty years sence Brer Ben noticed how Sis Sary looked or pay her a compliment, an' anodder reason why she takes to de shops for consolation is to git somebody to tickle her vanity—an' she ain't alone. Dere's many a woman dat buys a twenty-dollar hat des for de pleasure of hearin' a shopgirl say, Oh, Mrs. Brown, how puffectly grand you do look in dat lovely confection,' but wid you figger, an' hair, an' complexion, an' eyes, you would des be beautiful in anything.'"

"Yassum; I knows how dat is myself, an' when de gal dat is paid to lie, an' hand out dat line of talk rolls up her eyes when I says in a kind of feeble tone of voice, dat I specks maybe dat a white swiss hat wid pale pink ribbon on hit is a mite too young for a woman of my adage, wid grown children, an' says, 'Why, sho'ly, madam, you is jokin'. I should never have tucken you to be over twenty-one,' I is a goner, an' fudermo', I never begrudges de money, because de time comes in ev'y woman's life whar she's willin' to pay for flattery when she can't git it no odder way.

"An' dere's Sis Emily, whose husband is one of dese heah men wid a rovin' foot an' a goo-goo eye, when you meets her downtown wid a haz dat's bulgin' wid samples, she's sort of feelin' her revenge, an' tryin' to break even on de clothes question for de love she done lost. I'se always sort of suspicious of dem wives dat's got too good clothes, unless dair husbands is moughty rich. Hit looks lak dat maybe de husband dasn't raise a row 'bout de bills.

"But bless de lan', no matter what happens dere's always de comfort of clothes. Hit's a refuge dat never fails in times of trouble. I mind de time when Cinthy Jones' husband got blowed up in de saw mill, an' Cinthy was dat distracted wid grief dat ev'ybody thought dat she'd lose her mind. Dey couldn't git her to eat, nor to sleep, nor to notice her chilren, an' she des walked up an' down de flo' a-wringin' her hands, an' a-weepin' an' a-wailin' dat dere warn't nothin' lef' for her in life. She sho'ly was a grand mourner, ef dere ever was one, an' ev'ybody dat went to see her des come away shakin' deir haid, an' sayin' dat she suttinly would die of grief.

"I'll pinted her to de comforts of religion, Sis Mirandy,' says Brer Jenkins, 'but she didn't seem to take no interest in de subject, an' I couldn't reach her heart no matter how earnestly I prognosticated 'bout de joys of de future life.'

"'Hit's mighty sad,' said I, 'an' maybe she is gwine to die of grief, dough pussonally I ain't never seed no widow do hit yit, but befo' we gives up hope, I will go an' try on her a consolation dat I ain't never seed fail yit.'

"So I tied on my bonnet an' stepped over to Sis Cinthy's house, an' dere sits Sis Cinthy a-rockin' herself back an' forth, an' a-mournin' an' a-groanin', an' I sets down beside her an' I says.

"'Sis Cinthy, is you seed dem new mournin' bonnets down at Salem's, yit? I disremembers when I has ever seed any dat was so sweet, an' dat had such a set to 'em, an' one of dem long, flowin' veils sho'ly will look out of sight on a woman dat is tall, an' got a slim, straight-fronted figger lak you is.'

"'In dat so, Sis Mirandy?' says Sis Cinthy, a-perkin' up, 'dem flowin' veils always was becomin' to me, an' whilst my heart is busted an' my life ain't nothin' but a desert, an' superstition, from dis time on, I sho'ly do feel bit to be my sacred duty to do po' John proud in my mournin', an' not look lak a drab bik dat fat little Lizzie Smith done when her husband died, an' a Sis Mirandy ef you'll step down dar an have one of dem bonnets sent up, an' take tee 'bout six black frocks wid knife plaiting in de back an' godets in de front, an' a little baby Irish in de appliques in de waist, to choose from, I think dat maybe I can control my feelin's enough to pick one out.'

"An' dat's de way I is brought de comfort to mo' dan one afflicted sister.

"Yassum, shoppin' sho'ly is de little sunshine in a woman's life, an' de one thing dat we couldn't do widout. An' you ain't gwine to hear of no woman followin' de example of dat man dat used de feller for callin' him a dude."

"WHEN SHE GOES TO BUY A DRESS TRIES TO GIT SOMETHIN' AS DIFFERENT FROM ANYBODY ELSE'S AS SHE CAN."

"SIS CINTHY, IS YOU SEED DEM NEW MOURNIN' BONNETS DOWN AT SELEM'S, YIT?"

Mefodrama Has Its Innings on the Local Stage

BOSTONIANS are to get melodrama to their hearts' content this week, for all but one of the new shows are of that brand. There is enough variety of style, too, to please all tastes. The "stunts" range from the hero's being tied to a stake in a den of snakes, and a gentleman burglar cracking a safe, to a battle with Chinamen and a game of cards for a man's life. Grand opera is also to the fore again and several companies remain here for another week. The vaudeville houses offer new bills, and there is a change of bill at each of the burlesque houses. Here is the list

What the Theatres Offer

Majestic Theatre

Blanche Bates in "The Girl of the Golden West" begins a three weeks' engagement tomorrow night. There is no lessening of greater popularity here than Miss Bates. "The Girl of the Golden West" was so generally commented upon not only in Boston, but throughout all the large cities of the Eastern half of the country, that a second engagement was contemplated. Miss Bates has made a study of the story that is to be seen with the remarkable stage effects, and so it is also a matter of pride to the whole company with few exceptions to know that with that will be found to be the same cast. During its engagement there will be matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

Castle Square Theatre

There is another week of grand opera at the Castle Square. Regular week famous for its combination of a starring plot with beautiful and impressive scenes produced in Venice in 1851. It has been seen all over the civilized world, throughout Europe and America, in Australia, even in Africa, and Anderson for the title role, J. K. Murray and Forrest Huff will appear alternately with Clara Lane and Blanche Evans will again take the part of Gilda. The role of Mantua will be sung by Ellery Dow, Leo Henry Taylor with George Sweet, Sparadrap by W. H. Pringle as Count Ceprano and Peter von Buesing as Matalena. The orchestra will be under the direction of Frank X. Mandeville.

Boston Theatre

"Trilby, or the Amateur Cracksman," the drama made from a series of sketches published under this title, by E. W. Hornung, is the bill at the Boston this week. The lover and the cracksman in the play are one and the same person. The thieving done by the hero is for the benefit of an invalid sister, for whose sake he is driven to the practice of crime. The sister is Trilby, Wilson Mizner has the title role, Walter Walker, Captain Bidwell, Lillian Mackenzie, Harry Mainhall, Clarence Handyside, Paul Linton, Frederick Le Count, Edward Cowan, Grace Carlyle, Mabel Morrison, Hazel Barrie, Ethel Merrill, Paul Linton, Frank Hall Clarke, Lucy Lee Sanderson, Ethel Merr Sanderson, Lady Maud Bellamy, Miss Morrison, Hazel Barrie and Miss Merrill.

Park Theatre

The performances at the Park Theatre last week almost established a record for the house in point of attendance. Nothing has made a more decided success in many years at the Park than Wang, a play in which Richard Bennett and Grace Elliston and Grant Stewart will again appear. The return of the company at the end of the present week will be greeted by many friends of the players, who created their parts when the piece was first presented here. Ellen Mortimer, Jane Lium, Helena Collier, Garrick, Alice Bradley, John Smith, Albert Perry, Bishop Lumsden, Master Manning, Miss Bell, Dennis Burnside and Thomas Powell make up the cast for next week. Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

Orpheum Theatre.

Vesta will be the feature. Prominent electricians will appear on the stage and examine live bulbs with electric current. Her lights a gas jet with his tongue, breaks a hundred bulbs with 5,000 volts, has fire and smoke from with his hands. A new of the audience. Edwards Davis, in the Unmasking," is tragedy written by himself, is also featured. Edward Clark and his "Winning Widows," give a bunch of musical comedy. Quinlan and Mack in the "Traveling Dentist." Charles Howard the brass character impersonator. Montgomery and Moore in a comedy sketch; Willis and Hassan, acrobatics; and Paul La Croix, Grasp Juggler, are in the bill.

CHRISTINE LA BARRAQUE [illegible] make her [illegible] Boston [illegible] This marks [illegible] appearance in her native state. [illegible] bone, strength and purity with [illegible] an unusual degree [illegible] sings in English, French, Spanish and Italian [illegible] took the degree [illegible] at the University of California, and later [illegible] at the Hastings Law School, [illegible] practice in the [illegible] courts of San Francisco at the same time. Miss La Barraque, so far as is known, is the only lady [illegible] been admitted to the American bar. Coming to Boston three years ago she studied at the New England Conservatory of Music, [illegible] becoming a pupil of William L. Whitney of this city, and through his faith in her ability that she was enabled to go to Florence last year for further study.

THAIS LAWTON has gone back to San Francisco as leading woman of the Alcazar Theatre, where she is a big and loyal following. When fire and earthquake made an ash heap of San Francisco Miss Lawton was leading woman of the Belasco & La [illegible] stock company in Boston she became such a favorite that she was re-engaged for the present season. Then came the shift of managerial plans whereby the policy changed from drama to opera. Miss Lawton's contract was cancelled under an amicable arrangement. Her return to San Francisco will mean renewed prosperity for the Alcazar, where the management has encountered difficulty in finding a leading woman to please its patrons.

THEATREGOERS are not to see either Mr Robertson or his wife, Gertrude Elliott, this season. The [illegible] English stars has been cancelled owing to the ill health of Mr Robertson who may not be able to appear in England until next season. This is sad news, doubly sad because the death of Mr Mansfield has already reduced materially the immediate prospect of momentous achievement on our stage. Mr Robertson's Mad Hamlet was inspired by those who came under the ennobling spell of his pure and beautiful art last season. The cruel thing is that his physical health is declining and high-minding as his spiritual and [illegible] power.

Stage Tragedies That the Public Never Knows Of

Ambitious Young People "Try Out" Acts Before Audiences of Two Persons.

FOND HOPES CRUSHED

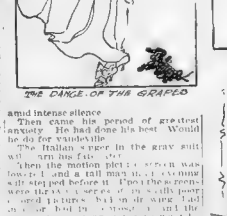
THE COMEDY and TRAGEDY IN VAUDEVILLE TRYOUTS



ALL is not comedy in vaudeville. There are many, many tragedies—but these the general public rarely sees.

And the greatest tragedy of all the tragedy that means most, perhaps to the participants—is that enacted at the "try-out" of a new act, when the decision of the powers that be is that "it won't do."

After weeks of preparation of rehearsals and wire-pulling to get the opportunity for a "try-out," there comes the fateful day. With sober, expectant faces the ambitious young people make their first appearance on the stage—with perhaps two equally sober and serious people for an audience—they go through their act and anxiously wait for the verdict.

"Will it do for vaudeville" is the question their line would ask.

It won't do" is the almost invariable response.

What a sinking of heart, what a "gone feel in" what a crushing of fond hopes such a verdict causes. Let it cannot be denied. The act won't do. It would be hissed off the stage.

"Try-out" Settles Fate.

It was morning try-out hour at the Orpheum on Thursday.

In the darkened auditorium where there could be seen with difficulty the dim figures of the scrub women and the men engaged in polishing and dusting the brass and woodwork, were seated three men and three women.

"We've got two dozen acts that want try-outs to-day," said the manager. "They are coming in droves. Last season we tried-out seventy-nine acts here at this house, and accepted one of them. That is about the average—one in a hundred or so.

And they came in droves for their try-outs. Poor, hopeful, ambitious, innocent people—when only one in a hundred or so would do!

Presently a man in a gray business suit appeared on the stage, accompanied by a man who advanced to the piano.

The gray-suited man was an Italian operatic singer—at least he said he was. He looked the image of Caruso. He was a baritone—one of the kind that Director Mapleson used to say he could buy by the carload. There was just a ripple of applause from "the friends of the victim."

Then he sang "Come Out, My Dear." One of the women clapped three times as he finished the song. Then he attacked grand opera, singing with much feeling but little success the Toreador song from "Carmen."

At the finale he bowed to the almost vacant house and walked off the stage, amid intense silence.

Then came his period of greatest anxiety. He had done his best. Would he do for vaudeville.

The Italian singer in the gray suit will earn his living.

When the motion picture screen was lowered and a tall man in full evening suit stepped before it. Then the screen were thrown scenes of a small pony and trained dogs, but in the wing I had to be dragged off as I did the man in the evening suit would be when I had to talk in pantomime. He spoke German with a Irish accent. Irish with a Yiddish accent, and in personation that came to end of the mark.

Dead Silence Reigns.

He gave a quick lightning of the breath and called it emotional acting he spoke of his dream-ah being broken-ah, and referred to the gown his sweetheart wore as her dress. But he was allowed to continue to the bitter end. No applause rewarded him. Only dead silence.

As the curtain swung on it used to men were seen in apparent animation. They were to offer a comedy act, for acrobatics, tinsel and tights. The gown. The other had supplied himself with a wig and a false mustache.

There was much posing around with a woman's skirt which they took for a bag, and which the man with the wig eventually put on. Why he did it could not be learned. There was much tumbling around upon the floor, and then the man in the dressing gown sang.

Can you guess what he sang?

It was "Luff me an de world eez mine-un"—at least it is what it was supposed. He had a good voice, but it was sadly untrained.

"Say, say!" he then on the stage. That'll do. That sketch won't do!"

It is the manager of the house who speaks. The would-be actors realize

'Only One Act In a Hundred' Is Accepted

Secret of Success in Vaudeville Is Novelty, and Few Acts Have It.

MANAGER'S WORD IS FINAL

nay-ne

Everybody in the audience, which has increased to four by this time, is smiling, and the manager nods as if to say, "It is pretty good. Perhaps we can give it an engagement."

The curtain is again closed and before the footlights comes a man in evening dress carrying an enormous harp.

He plays. There is no sound from the auditorium. He picks up his instrument and goes away.

A tall, thin girl, gowned in a Grecian robe, comes dancing on—all smiles. She has a bunch of grapes in each hand. She puts the grapes on the floor and dances around them. Then she waves her arms, dances some more to the strains of the piano, far away on the stage, smiles, and fades away.

The final "try-out" of the morning was that of a magician (?). He had his cards "palmed" and the name he used was "Theodore Krise." He went through the same old move, "Will some kind gentleman loan me his derby hat" I have no cuits to deceive you. Here we have the bottle and the glass," etc.

Same Old Routine.

You know the routine. You have seen magicians do it thousands of times. He had nothing, absolutely nothing new—but his visiting card read "The Great Krise."

He closed his act with "the wonderful Hindu trick and sank myself" the same old story. He probably had spent the savings of a year from his salary in the store to purchase the magician's outfit had studied several works on "How to become a magician in ten minutes" or had perhaps taken a course in a correspondence school. And now he calls it one of "The tire."

Will he do for vaudeville? No. While he does it cleverly enough it is not new, and the secret of success in vaudeville is novelty.

So out of the number of "try-outs" on this morning, only one was found that might possibly be used. What becomes of the others—those who tried their abilities as entertainers?

Only themselves and their families know. Perhaps they did not tell their friends know that they were going to be given the opportunity to appear in public on the stage, even if the audience consisted only of three or four persons.

It were better for them if they did not take their friends into their confidence.

But what a tragedy it must be for them! What air-castles come tumbling down about their heads as they see their steal away from the stage!

Ah, the tragedies of stage life are unknown to those who sit and laugh at its comedies.

Final Chapter in Fourth of the Series of Startling Adventures of Zara, the Woman of Mystery.

CHAPTER VI.

LYNCH shook his head decidedly and declared

"There are wrong there, Miss Zara. Mike is the soul of honesty and of loyalty. He may have put the poison there, but he had nothing to do with keeping threats away. What object would he have in murdering innocent people?"

Zara gave Lyn h her attention, very earnest and placid, until he had finished. Then she seemed wrapped in thought.

"Mr. Lynch" she began, slowly, after a time, "will you get a bucket of water?"

My friend rose and went to the kitchen. Presently we heard him pumping at the sink.

"You really believe Mike murdered these people?" I asked.

"I know that he murdered some of them," she said mechanically.

Here you are," Lynch said, as he came into the reception room he held a pail full of water.

She threw it on the fire. Zara sprang to her feet softly.

"Now I make an awful smoke," explained Lyn h.

Zara grinned at him with such a malicious glee that I

I hope so," she said softly.

"Ah, there she goes!" He saw the water on the fire with a grand flourish. "The smoke he goes your way, I'm sure."

Zara sprang to her feet, both steps in her hands, and moved across the room.

Thin Vapor

The half light of the fire had gone. Only a sickly, green opaque darkness, except for the glow of the coals, which she flashed about the room, as if in the hands. Her face seemed great shadow. After frantically dodging about the room they settled on one side of the chimney in the room of the room and crept slowly up until the circled the skylight which framed the top of the well-like staircase. There they rested an instant, and crept down another side of the chimney. As I watched, I saw a thin vapor issuing from the chimney wall through a small crevice.

It brought me to Zara's side, with an object of her purpose.

Just as I reached her she flashed the beams at one after another of the corners of the room. I saw smoke creeping from the reception room through each of the openings.

By now the smoke in the reception room had become overpowering. What it was upstairs can be imagined. Nevertheless, she summoned us to follow to the second floor.

She did not pause at the landing, but, with Lynch and myself close behind, gasping for breath, she hurried into the bed room in which I had so narrowly escaped death. As she opened the heavy door, we were gagged by cool gas mixed with smoke.

"The other room" she gasped.

I ran and opened the door of the room on the opposite side of the hall.

Here again we were greeted with a strong odor of gas and smoke.

We then made a circuit of the rooms on the second floor, and in each case found the gas and smoke in the rooms were more dense than in the hallways.

Coincidences

So much for coincidences, I said, Julius, when, panting for breath, we stood on the veranda again.

"This is all Greek to me," sputtered Lynch. "All I saw was smoke in the rooms."

Zara silently led the way back to the reception room. Here we found the fire dead and the atmosphere clearing rapidly. In a surprisingly short time the air was breathable.

Just as I thought," I heard Zara murmur to herself. Aloud, she called us to follow her to the kitchen, where she opened the cupboard door again and brought the lamp also held to bear on the lowest shelf, close to the floor

Just see if there is any dust on that shelf" she commanded.

I passed my hand over the laths of the shelf as I found it was covered with very fine dust.

Let me see your hand," she continued I presented it. She examined the dust with close, business like scrutiny.

"Yet that cupboard has been closed for years—all the house is hundreds of yards from the nearest road," speculated Zara, softly.

"Now, Mr. Lynch, it is your turn! will you locate that rat hole on the top shelf?"

"Why, I thought he found it before, returned my friend in surprise.

I know, replied Zara; "see if you can do as well."

A Rat Hole

Here it is Lynch announced. "It's a big one. I comes right through the wall. I must have an opening near the outside of the house, for there is a breeze that

How far from the hole is the "poison?" inquired Zara. Not

No half a dozen inches or so. answered Lynch dropping to the floor and lying full length. "It's my, but the dust is thick on the top shelf."

"Let me look at your hands," Zara said, tersely.

"Just as I supposed," Zara murmured and turning led the way to the reception room.

"Here again she commanded the examination of the lower and the top shelf and the location of the rat hole and box of poison

"That clears up everything," she announced after the final show of hands.

"Now, let us go back to the veranda."

Dawn was just breaking when we gained it about the lamps on the veranda.

The only person I couldn't fix as the cause of so many deaths here," began Zara, speaking to me, "is the one who looked yourself to be led astray by the appearances against her. It influenced you in spite of your common sense.

Solution

"The whole matter is very simple. In the first place, under the deaths that occurred thirty years ago.

"A campaign was first begun against the rats. That supplies two propositions for consideration. Either the rat poison was used. Discarding superstition, it is reasonable that the ghosts of the murdered tenants in the house, and indirectly on the rat poison was employed to exterminate the rats. Again, this supplies two propositions for consideration. Either the poison was poisoned themselves by musicke or intention or the rat poison was carelessly used.

"We, therefore, first find the rat holes. One is in the refrigerator. The other is in the cupboard. Now we look for the poison. We find it from eight to six inches from the rat holes, on a top shelf of the cupboard and of the refrigerator. We presume that she was are of lath construction, four laths with half an inch between space to each shelf.

"That the poison was carelessly distributed we are glad by observing it in white powder or dust on the lowest shelf.

"This confirms the careless rat poison proposition, and again presents two propositions, Either the poison was placed on the shelves by some person or by some other agency. If it had been placed there by a person by the rat hole would have been found it and used it off before it got into the food and poisoned the family.

"Therefore, we come to the other agent. We find there were two—the rats themselves and the second unknown agent. It is not to be that the rats themselves would have taken the poison from the top to the bottom of the cupboard, therefore, that is disposed of.

"That leaves the second unknown agent. Now, I will proceed to state of the case. Assuming that the rats found the poison and refrigerator was connected"

She paused for an instant.

More Mystery

"So much for the early deaths," she began again. Now let us consider the later deaths. They occurred, for the most part, I understand, in the Winter. All of the victims were found dead in bed.

"Now, I have noticed through years of neglect the chimney in the centre of the reception room leaked. The leak was not very noticeable for there was little water. But the deadly coal gas leaked. Ascending the gas found its way to the skylight that lights the reception room. There, it was condensed and fell again, thus losing considerable of its color. In falling, it was drawn by the draught of the register into the reception room, from there it found its way to the sleeping rooms, and there brought death. That this is true is shown by the fact that those

Her voice fell away so slightly

"Did you notice that I concluded for her.

For then, during all the morning mist I had noticed persons looking into each other's eyes. We forgot the existence of Lynch, until he burst suddenly upon us startled us.

"Let's go down and see Mike," he said, turning his back to us. "Het he's worried to death about us."

"But Zara," I interposed; "you don't suppose that poison in the shelves came from those two ancient boxes of poison?"

She shook her head decisively.

"Oh, I had a hand in that," said Lynch "when I purchased the last fresh poison around the house wherever he found it had been placed before. You see, they had an expert rat catcher go over the house thirty odd years ago, before the deaths began, and fix the holes. So Mike simply renewed it from time to time."

CITY SEALERS' WORK A FARCE, REPORT OF FINANCE PROBERS.

Demand That Ma[illegible] Col. Lovering and Re[illegible]ize Whole Dep[illegible]t.

"NO MORE MEN NEEDED"

Sealer Lacks Knowledge of Work, Re[illegible]t Says and Deputies Rather Loaf.

FRAUDS NOT PROSECUTED

Mayor Praises Lovering, Who Admits He Is Helpless in Politicians' Grip.

In a communication sent to Mayor Fitzgerald last night the Boston Finance Commission scathingly condemned the city department of sealers of weights and measures as conducted under the present sealer Colonel Henry B. Lovering, and recommends its immediate reorganization under a new head. [illegible] such of the present deputies as may succeed in passing a proper examination under the civil service rules.

The commission recommends the withdrawal of the nomination of the eight new deputies whose confirmation is now pending before the Board of Aldermen, and the repeal of the ordinance authorizing those appointments.

To confirm these appointments, the commission states, would only aggravate the evils of the present system, and would, in the opinion of the commission, be an act of folly and waste of public time to increase the force, or to add to the appropriation of this department as now constituted.

Mayor Lauds Lovering.

Mayor Fitzgerald, after reading the communication of the Finance Commission, issued a statement in which he did not say whether or not he would withdraw the appointments of the eight additional deputies. The Mayor said:

"It is my intention to give the report of the commission the most careful investigation, with a view to securing the best results for all the citizens of Boston.

"Mr. Henry B. Lovering, the sealer of weights and measures, was appointed to the position of the late Sealer Hollis. He had served in Congress together and for a term with attachments [illegible] between them. I found Mr. Lovering occupying the office which I take pride in filling, a chair, and having proved to me that he was a person [illegible] mayor, with a sound record as a [illegible] and a business man, I appointed him to the City of Lynn warden of the State Prison. That he was a member of the common council, and a member of the United States Congress and whose whole public career had been one of honesty and usefulness to his fellow citizens, and in a position to [illegible] served for [illegible] years, I reappointed him to [illegible] position.

"I regret exceedingly to be placed in a position where I must judge upon the findings of the Finance Commission which reflect upon the work of a man who, in his youth, was willing to risk his life for his country and still has public employment has cost [illegible] of society with a view to the good [illegible] who is dear to me, I [illegible] afford to lose his present office.

Findings of the Commission.

Some of the findings of the commission are:

That the outside deputies average only 114 1-6 days' work a year, and that in December, 1906, they worked only two and five sixths days apiece.

That the weight of the [illegible] inside deputies in the sealing of milk jars, bottles, etc., are destroyed as soon as they are posted in the book and the [illegible] proof of the [illegible] outside deputies, but only the [illegible] record which indicates who are [illegible] who are not.

That the record of the total number of such measures sealed is covered [illegible] the evidence received from five of the largest

LINEHAN HAS BUSY WEEK CAMPAIGNING

Senator Frank J. Linehan, who is a candidate for renomination at the Democratic primaries, former Representative Edward F. McGrady, candidate for State committeeman, and Judge Edward L. Logan, have had a busy week campaigning in Wards 14, 14, 15 and 16. Candidate McGrady has received the endorsement of the Legislature was favorable to the people. This afternoon he will be tendered a reception in Gray's Hall. Addresses will be delivered by prominent labor leaders, as well as Judge Logan, Senator Linehan and Mr. McGrady.

Suspicion on Both Sides.

At the Democratic State Committee it was stated to a Boston Sunday American reporter last night that the credentials had been sent out yesterday to town and city organizations throughout the State where caucuses had been held.

M'NARY IN CLASH AT WHITNEY RALLY

At the Henry M. Whitney meeting in Ward 15, South Boston, last night there was an altercation between ex-Congressman William S. McNary, one of the speakers and Thomas H. Bradley, chairman of the ward committee. McNary said Bradley was only in power in the ward because he, McNary, had not seen fit to make a fight against him last year. He said that Bradley, while claiming to be a great friend of labor, had once lockyard it in a way that was disastrous to the labor cause.

This was, McNary said, when the bridge workers were asking for an increase of wages. Bradley was the only man out of twenty-five ward chairmen who did not indorse the bridge workers' application, according to McNary.

Bradley was in the hall and demanded the privilege of answering. He said that McNary's statement was untrue, that three chairmen declined to endorse the increase.

"Oh, there were three of you, were there, three in twenty-five?" exclaimed McNary.

"Yes," said Bradley. "There were three."

"Well, who were the other two?"

"William B. McClelland, Henry Fitzgerald and myself," replied the ward chairman. He then declared that he had always been in sympathy with labor and had done all he could in its interest.

The meeting was held by the Court

DRISCOLL HOPEFUL IN SHARP CONTEST

Though one of four fighting for the Democratic senatorial nomination for the Ninth District, comprised of Wards 23 and 24, Dennis J. Driscoll of Dorchester is hopeful of success of their efforts. Although he has never held public office Mr. Driscoll has always taken an interest in public questions affecting Dorchester and the city as a whole.

House, in Dorchester street, Daniel V. McLaine presided. The other speakers were Mr. Whitney, Congressman John A. Keliher and John A. Sullivan. Mr. Whitney spoke of the benefits to Massachusetts of reciprocity with Canada. His opponents had accused him of being a monopolist. He was, he said, if monopoly benefited the people.

With Canadian reciprocity there would be a reduction in the cost of the necessities of life, milk for instance, because the farmers' necessities could be obtained cheaper there than in the West.

INSTRUCTIONS TO AID VOTERS IN JOINT CAUCUSES TUESDAY

WESTERN BAY STATE CITIZENS ROUSED TO ENTHUSIASM BY HISGEN.

Heart to Heart Talks with Citizens on Remarkable Tour Gains Him Friends.

ADMIRED FOR HIS WORK

Farmers, Millhands and Storekeepers Promise to Support His Candidacy.

WEST SPRINGFIELD, Sept. 21.—After a very pleasant and encouraging trip through the western part of the State, Thomas L. Hisgen, candidate for the Independence League nomination for Governor, returned to his home here to-night. He said that he felt that the week had been most profitably spent, and that he had gained many friends by his heart to heart talks with the farmers, mill hands, storekeepers and others he had met in his travels through Hampden and Berkshire counties.

Mr. Hisgen says that he has talked to about 300 voters daily, besides a large number of housewives, and believes that the influence of many of the latter will be in his favor.

A great deal of excitement has been caused in the rural communities in the western part of the State by Mr. Hisgen's style of campaigning. It has been the custom of both of the old parties to send big political orators among the farmers. Rarely have the candidates for the office of Governor met the people face to face.

His Method Popular.

He has been assured that the innovation is a popular one with the busy people of the small towns and villages, who have not few opportunities to attend political rallies. It is harvest time for the farmers, storekeepers are busy getting in their Fall and Winter supplies of goods and the mill hands are too tired at night to make long trips to the cities, just for the sake of seeing and hearing ambitious politicians.

"I have been to see the voters at their homes, in the fields, in the streets and at the mills," said Mr. Hisgen, "and I have talked to [illegible] people, both old and young, in [illegible] and twenty, and on two occasions [illegible] of seven hundred and more than a hundred people.

"In every case a few of my coming at our place and what I told them that our cause did not [illegible] were a set of actors or touring cars or fireworks, and that I was glad to have a chance to [illegible] them in the old fashioned way, many to many, I was given to understand, that they were also glad to meet me and listen to my arguments.

Admired for Fighting Trust.

I was surprised to find how closely most of the people in the small cities and towns have followed my campaign against the Oil Trust and the Company's law [illegible] and I have just been told [illegible] that people in the [illegible] are [illegible] about half the price they had to pay them to the Standard Oil Company before I [illegible] Western Oil Company.

"I am going to get the votes of the people, and I don't care how hard I fight against the money of political parties to win them away from me. I know they are going to stick to me, for I am the only candidate for Governor on the Independence League ticket and to-day I am going to get their votes. I am appealing chiefly to the [illegible] and towns of western Massachusetts, to farmers, mill hands and the storekeepers.

Bread and Butter Topics.

"What have I been talking about? Why! I have been talking about bread and butter topics. I have been trying to show these people just how and in what manner how the lack of an anti-trust law affects their bread and butter, and the reasons it exists. I have talked with them as one man, I have met and talked to another. I have told those people to the westward of the hoosac, and they are going to vote for me on election. I want to tell you. They are with me, too. Every man I have talked with whom I have talked about the high price of living is an Independence Leaguer.

"Not being an orator, just a plain business man, who has kept a business which the poor people very largely patronized for a number of years, I have found my element in [illegible] a business man about the conditions which the common people are today up against.

Off On Return Trip.

"I wouldn't have missed that trip I have just made for a great deal, and I am going to resume it Monday morning. I shall get to Pittsfield early by train, and journey back in my canopy top with the old bay mare about a mile different from the one which I traveled going from West Springfield to Pittsfield.

At Hamilton on Friday, Mr. Hisgen made a great hit. Those who heard the lady summer resorts in the Western part of the State will remember that it was a wet rain, second in height to [illegible]. When he arrived in the afternoon and decided upon the meeting would be held that night the largest farm in the town was being used as a barn.

At the time he found nearly 200 farmers gathered in the barn, and more coming around. He had some of his friends distributed, one at the door and the other standing in a farmer's wagon, and the two attention of the audience for a few minutes.

Cheered at Big Auction.

At the end of ten minutes he had them for their attention and was greeted with loud cries of "Go on, go on." Ten minutes later he [illegible] he was given the [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] of money that [illegible] him.

That same night at [illegible] was at a Italian mass meeting. He had a great big time and the [illegible] with which he was received [illegible] Mr. Hisgen [illegible] Italian [illegible] Independence League ticket and [illegible] I am going to get their votes. I am a [illegible] of the Italian [illegible] and towns of western Massachusetts, to farmers, mill hands and the storekeepers.

Popular With Wage-Earners.

FACTS ABOUT PE-RU-NA

Is There Any Scientific Basis For The Claim That Peruna Prevents Infective Diseases?

It is during the months of September and October that some of the most infective diseases are at their height. Malaria and the infectious fevers of autumn find these months especially favorable to the growth and propagation of their deadly germs. Why is it September and October are the months when such diseases flourish?

Contaminated Drinking Water.

There are two reasons. First, the air and drinking water and food are especially contaminated during these months by the germs that give rise to such diseases. Whether the disease germs are the cause or simply a concomitant occurrence is a matter that need not be discussed here. But the fact that a superabundance of these germs is always accompanied by an epidemic of the diseases shows that there is some relation between them, that when one is present the other always appears.

There is no way known to man yet by which the germs of these diseases can be entirely avoided. Sanitary science is gradually doing away with them partly, but still they remain in great numbers. EVERY PERSON IS EXPOSED TO THEM CONSTANTLY.

The germs of infectious diseases are about us everywhere, but only certain people succumb to their baneful influence.

This brings us to consider the second reason why September and October are the especial seasons for epidemics. The fact that everybody is exposed to the germs of disease and yet comparatively few contract the disease shows beyond doubt that there must be some special reason why one person gets the disease and the other does not.

The skin, when unbroken, protects the outside of the body from disease germs, but it is well known that a raw surface or an open wound disables the skin from protecting the interior of the body, and disease germs may enter on such occasions.

Diseased Mucous Membranes.

THE MUCOUS MEMBRANES, when they are healthy, PROTECT THE INSIDE of the body from disease germs. But the slightest abrasion of the mucous membranes, or derangement of the mucous membranes by chronic catarrh, renders these membranes powerless to protect the body from disease germs. Hence they enter through the mucous membranes of the stomach, of the lungs, the intestines, accumulate in the blood in great numbers, and set up infective diseases that may prove fatal.

Since we cannot protect ourselves entirely from the presence of disease germs, the only thing that remains for us to do is to KEEP THE SKIN AND MUCOUS MEMBRANES INTACT so that the disease germs cannot reach the blood, even though they assail us from within and without.

This explains how it is that Peruna may be regarded as a preventive to these diseases, and suggests that it should be taken during the months when they are prevalent.

Peruna has thoroughly established itself as a catarrh remedy. Many thousands of people have taken Peruna for chronic catarrh, and found themselves completely restored.

Sometimes the catarrh is in the stomach. Other times in the throat and lungs. Sometimes in the intestinal tract. Peruna seems to act as a restorative in all these different forms of catarrh, and thus produces healthy mucous membranes.

Even if disease germs do enter the stomach and lungs, the healthy mucous membranes tend to protect the blood from their encroachments. This is the claim made for Peruna, and the claim is based on science and experience.

Pathologists have been aware for many years that A HEALTHY SKIN AND MUCOUS MEMBRANE CONSTITUTE PROTECTION AGAINST INFECTIVE DISEASES. This is a well established scientific fact.

The experience of thousands of people in all parts of the civilized world has established the fact beyond dispute that the USE OF PERUNA DOES RESTORE THE MUCOUS MEMBRANES to perfect health and protects the body from disease germs.

Dr. Stedman, Dr. H. M. Quinby of the Worcester Insane Hospital and Dr. George F. Kelly were the three alienists who were [illegible] tion of Ireland from Englishmen.

Missouri's Governor Demands Greater Democracy in National Problems.

WRONG-DOING EXPOSURES

Public Conscience's Awakening Due to Quickening of Moral Sense.

Jamestown, Va., Sept. 21. Governor Joseph W. Folk of Missouri today delivered a strong address here, in which he championed the appeal of the people of more and more moral law to national problems.

Gov. Folk is one of the leaders in the Democratic party. Not a Presidential candidate, he said in part:

"The people are the source of power, and the power they have conferred upon their representatives is not a privilege from this power, but a trust for the general welfare, and it is the province of the courts of the masses as opposed to the privilege of the classes.

"The nearer we keep to this idea the more real progress we shall make. It is further we get from it the more danger we shall have. Privilege, in whatever form it may appear, is the same in principle as a fetich, a false principle, a lie.

For Individual Rights

"Our government is founded upon the idea that the welfare of the individual, and the protection of the individual, demands the education of the people, the equality of rights, the denial of privilege to the majority, its wild progress in investing the people with all of the principles of liberty and individual rights.

"When we depart from these principles our government has gone. The spirit of the age is not a [illegible] when they were established, but is different before it. [illegible] of men. [illegible] of moral evil. [illegible] not to rob the few but to protect all. ## COMMISSION BEGINS BELATED PROBE OF N.H. WRECK HORROR

Actual Investigation of West Canaan Crash in Which 25 Were Killed Starts Tuesday.

ALREADY VISITED SCENE

"After Public Sentiment Had Cooled" Board Inspected Charred Ruins of Train.

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 21.—On next Tuesday the New Hampshire Railroad Commission, of which Henry M. Putney of Manchester, the man who said that the board "didn't want to do anything until public sentiment had cooled off," is chairman, opens its investigation of the wreck at West Canaan last Sunday, in which twenty-five lives were lost.

County Solicitor M. D. Goodhue, of Lebanon and Attorney-General Eastman assist in the investigation.

The other members of the commission who are associated with Mr. Putney are George E. Boles of Wilton and Arthur G. Whittemore of Dover.

Already the commission has looked over the scene of the wreck. They went four days after the accident occurred in a special train, in which were General Superintendent Charles P. Hyde of the Boston & Maine, special counsel John M. Mitchell of Concord and other members of the legal department of the road.

There was nobody on the train who was not either connected with the commission or with the railroad.

Found Car Had Been Burned.

The commission found that the car in which the dead were laid had been totally destroyed by fire. Railroad employees did the burning, but the flames were spread quickly, it was said in explanation, by the contention was that this car was of such flimsy construction that the heavier, better built baggage car simply cut it in halves. The trucks were left, however, and these were carefully examined. Such evidence as the trucks showed the commission is guarding carefully.

Mr. Putney cheerfully admitted that it was the duty of the commission to investigate all such accidents and report to the attorney general's office. "Blame is to be found. But none of the members went to the scene "until public sentiment had cooled." By the time that the cooling of sentiment had arrived the trucks had been cleared, the victims buried and their relatives had gone home.

County Attorney Cobleigh did some investigation on his own account. "I don't see what he has to do with it," Mr. Putney is quoted as saying

The Commission's 1906 Record.

The record of the commission for 1906, before Mr. Whittemore had become a member, is interesting.

The deaths of thirty-one persons were investigated. It was declared by the Commission that in thirty-seven cases death was due to the negligence of the persons killed. In one case the blame was placed on the engineer. The engineer died in the wreck and no statement was ever obtained from him.

In one case the Commission after long deliberation decided that the blame rested on the railroad.

Most of the cases were carried to the courts by relatives of the victims. In a large per cent. the railroad has had to pay heavy sums as the jury decreed. In cases twelve men decided that the victim's end was due to the railroad's negligence.

The commission receives its salary as a special railroad tax. Many times attempts have been made to change this means of support for a body that is supposed to be working in the interests of the State. Twice the State has had referendums that would seem to settle the matter, but always a change is introduced by those opposed to them.

Operators of the B. & M. system are said to be going on an aggressive campaign to fight the attempt to make it responsible for the terrible loss of life. Greeley Hazen Wilson is the counsel. He has engaged counsel to represent him before the commission when the hearing is held.

Musgrove Scores Railroad.

If it were not for the grip which the railroads have on the politics of the State of New Hampshire there would be no such horrors as that witnessed at West Canaan, Representative Frank J. Musgrove declared to a Boston American reporter to-day. Mr. Musgrove is one of the leaders in the Democratic movement and has been a foe of the railroad domination of State affairs.

"This terrible accident," said Mr. Musgrove, "to my mind proves a political aspect. It proves that the railroads were guilty of such laxity as could only be the result of long and careless familiarity with the power they have to control the politics of the State. Why, in every other way the railroads are compelled to keep their employes under the strictest discipline. Every man who has charge of a train is subjected to a rigid examination as to his eyesight, hearing and general physical condition. Every man who has charge of a train is subjected to a rigid examination as to his eyesight, hearing and general physical condition. Every man who has charge of a train is subjected to a rigid examination as to his eyesight, hearing and general physical condition.

"No railroad employe is allowed to engage in any other occupation while he is employed by the railroad

TO PLEAD INSANITY IN MURDER TRIAL

Harvey Scailes, Accused Wife-Slayer, Also Faces Charge of Shooting Brother.

CHARLES F. CROCKETT

Defence Is Insanity.

Scailes is now in Augusta, where he was taken at the request of his counsel, Elmer E. Richardson, to be examined as to his sanity.

Mr. Richardson has set up the defence that the slayer was insane at the time of the shooting. He has procured a mass of evidence to this end, his counsel is said to believe that a case affording the best chance of success in the case of insanity. Jesse and wife of the children, it says, that made such an impression.

Jesse Scailes, young and good looking, had been married but a little more than a year when he first met Phyllis Hatchelder, who lived with her parents on the Arnold road. Phyllis was then but sixteen years old, and the attentions of the young man were objected to by her parents.

Thinks Only of Children.

Scailes, as he awaits the call to court to take up the case, thinks only of his children. There are two of them, Emma, aged seven months, and Sherman, who is eighteen months old.

"If they had only let me had the children I would have been all right," he declared recently. "I could get work and support them on my wages," he added.

Last Sunday Mrs. Scailes stepped for all over the log cabin in the woods, took the children with her. Harvey absolutely refused. The mother secured the little ones and carried them from the cabin.

"My heart did not cease to be jealous of me," Jesse asserted to a Boston Sunday American reporter in Dedham. "I was working on a farm at that time and I went to make love to my wife."

Jealous Without Cause.

Jesse was seriously injured by the shot that struck him. It cut the lobe of his right ear and came out through his left cheek. As soon as he recovered from the wound he was brought before the court, charged with murder. He was committed to the county jail here where he has also been confined since the tragedy.

It is [illegible] tragedy [illegible] Scailes [illegible] Phyllis [illegible] Hatchelder [illegible] brothers-in-law and the two [illegible] dren. By Edward E. Cogswell.

For a parcel of pinheads first prize would go to many of the promoters of Grand Circuit meetings were a vote among the campaigning horsemen to be taken, and it would be the horsemen themselves that should take the blue ribbon for F. Z. Marks when the case of hand-outs are discussed.

I understand that the word pinheads is used advisable, meaning that the crust is smaller than slight figures more in their estimation than the dollar in the future, and in order to squeeze every cent they can out of it their patrons, the horsemen who give the show, that get the ass in the tender part of the jugular at every opportunity.

Now just take a glance at the open re ferred to and note their wonderfully deep interest in the sport by the manner that they do business.

Campau Hurts Sport.

There is David Campau, for years head of the Grand Circuit as its president and dictator. His hand of management has been rule in everything else except racing, and as before mentioned that apparently can stand any sort of a freeze-out and thrive.

It would take too much time to tell all he did at Detroit to feather his own nest to the detriment of the sport, and it is too well known for repeating, anyway, as a look at his meeting last July and one now associated with him tell the story in a nutshell.

They were no others than the notorious Tuller, Adler and Cella gambling syndicate that in the past has done more to close up racing through the West than can be ever-come in years by clean management. A pretty bunch, eh?

The Cleveland track has in the past few years done handsomely in running their meetings in the face of a likely loss, and through this reason alone should be patronized by horsemen and the public.

But the time back when matters were prosperous, and they wanted to beg it as much as anybody you know. Their purses and small-sized stake events, with conditions to the nose, cut in badly on the horsemen, but the latter were obliged to stand it or get off the racing map that last week of the Grand Circuit.

Each year it is generally understood the stop-ping of field selling nearly came about through the order of ridding Glenville of a Grand Army veteran, whose face they nearly like in running a bond in opposition to the business done at the track.

Many cannot forget, either, how they declared off a meeting only a few years back and caused the horsemen losses of thousands of dollars that had skipped to the track for the object of racing.

We will now jump away to Providence where Fred Perkins has put need to race ta kites are need from having been run only a six weeks in the fair association are from what can be understood is prosperous. It throws man-position does not to-day but bring a number of actual investment, but made him a name over and above any he has been to since owning it.

Wanted the Earth.

It was just Perkins's policy of wanting anybody to get off the earth except him it stopped pool selling there this season and his own small half-mile tracks and the same would have proved profitable proposition at the State Fair at Syracuse, ask of the restraining line that eliminated horsemen out of $750 which was due them for the week's racing at that place.

Distinguished horses are no more. Of course, not, and we have the sympathy puts in its clause of racing that a horse disqualifying the field, or any part thereof, be entitled to one money only, gets run by your last penny that that awarding him does not intend playing fair with the horsemen, only so far as it is forced to. A nice proposition getting into the New York State Treasury $750 of money right fully belonging to the horsemen, by all fairness.

Next we will take Mr. Columbus. This is another set of names to fix the—Their actions in the past show how interested they are in promoting the game for their own benefit only, dog in the manger style.

It is not entirely the meanness of the management in not having been willing to give an extra $1,200 purses for the 2.11 pace which they had to be divided through has a big steep starters, making nine to each division, no horsemen having to start for a $300 purse in each, but these things are but a trifle to others.

Were you ever at Columbus? Right in the face of all to run the worst sweet turns and most dangerous track in existence of horsemen, no such track as the Columbus Fairgrounds. The question with racing that it about like to call it half because of the fact that it is the racing that many will censure for all that is wrong?

Managers Opposed Bill.

There is known fact that it was the managers of the Columbus track who fought the passage of a betting law in Ohio, which would have allowed Cleveland and other tracks in the State to have the business, and appeared at one time to have had a good chance of passing a law.

Columbus opposed it because they had local matters arranged so that by their instance pool selling could go on, and under the proposed law they would not be able to do away with the wheel and other gambling devices that reap them the harvest during the Grand Circuit meetings. How does their action strike the lover of the high harness horse sport?

With the racing booming under these conditions of men at the head of the associations framed its opponents to be well proved, and were conditions bettered there is no gainsaying the fact that it would be more popular.

To the track management at Buffalo, we pledge to Readville, Hartford and Lexington the highest spots on the calendar and horsemen and public are certain of just treatment by officials who have the true interests of the sport at heart.

Fair Treatment at Readville.

Likely many will differ about Readville, as some object to the style in which it has been conducted, but stinted to the bottom and it will be found that at no place are horsemen given fairer treatment. The poor horseman with one entry has the same opportunity as has the rich one with a dozen entries. Conditional entries are strictly inhibited. The justice to all principal has made it so that the meetings are a paying investment in fact of the fact that there is no betting on the races.

Perhaps many will object to Andy Welch being given a set of stand wings, but the reference here is not to the running of Charter Oak Park and not to his many per cent. bookmaking on the races and syndicate looks in the the circuit where he does business, as the fault should be laid to the door of the management of those tracks that permit wrong done to their patrons.

Lexington does not come into the list at all, as it is not a member of the grand circuit, running an independent meeting at the close of the circuit. Secretary Horace Hill needs no flowers for the upright manner in which he conducts his meetings, and others will be given in this narrative, but were the criticised members of the grand circuit to follow in the footsteps of Wilson, the associations at Readville, Providence, Buffalo and Hartford besides Cleveland in the past two years would have a reformation and the prosperity of their tracks, it would be much better for the horsemen, the public and the future of the sport.

SIR THOMAS LIPTON WILL BUILD YACHT LIKE THE WHITE HEATHER II.

NEW LIPTON YACHT PATTERNED AFTER WHITE HEATHER II.

So wonderful have been the performances of M. B. Kennedy's White Heather II. in the regattas in England that Sir Thomas Lipton at last thinks he has found the secret that will result in his winning the America Cup. The new Shamrock, fourth of that name, will be built on the lines of the White Heather II. It is Fife, and it is expected that she will show astonishing speed and be able to at last carry the famous yachting trophy back to the tight little isle. The White Heather II. has still to be beaten in plenty large enough to race, and that, as the rule calls for a wholesome type of yacht many would be built to defend the cup. They do not agree with the arguments made by some of the members of the N. Y. Y. C. that the cup stands for speed on a given water line length only, and argue that even if it did, the yachts built under the new rule are fast.

Furthermore, they point out that the Queen, a boat built under the rule and a boat about the limit allowed for a cup race, made the fastest run ever published over the Cup course. She sailed the 30-mile triangle off Sandy Hook faster than the Reliance ever sailed it, and if she were racing against the Reliance under either rule she would receive so much time allowance that she would win under all most any conditions.

The challenge in all probability will be submitted to the club at the meeting to be held on October 3. It may be acted on at that meeting. The owners of racing craft hope that it will. If, however, it is referred to a committee, those members have talk racing men should be in the majority on that committee. They argue that racing men know more about the sport than the owners of steam yachts or members of rocking-chair fleets. With men on those committees they argue that a yachtsmen said to-day would make an equitable challenge. Cup races must be a matter of interest.

Why a many are wondering why the Boston, New York and Philadelphia Syndicates May Build Defenders.

terms of the challenge are, others are going to build for the defense of the Cup, and if the New York Yacht Club meets Sir Thomas Lipton in a fair and sportsmanlike manner, next year's yachting season will be the most brilliant ever witnessed in the waters. There will be at least a half-six 68-footers built, and all designers of prominence will be represented in the competition.

It was reported yesterday that ex-Commodore J. P. Morgan, who sailed the Columbia against the Shamrock II., and who many times skippered the latter boat in the Kaiser's races, would enter the sport again, and that he already has been in conference with Nat Herreshoff for a defender. How true it is said, would be represented by a yacht owned by Robert W. Emmons, 2nd, with possibly Charles Francis Adams, 2nd, as a junior and that would be Herreshoff boat. There were rumors yesterday a Philadelphia syndicate, headed by Walter Cleaw, commodore of the Philadelphia Cruising Yacht Club, would have a boat.

WILKESBRINO MADE B. S. DILLON HUSTLE

First Heat of Their Race on the Speedway Results in Exciting Brush.

Notwithstanding the counter attraction of Weymouth Fair that took many of the horses belonging to the Dorchester Driving Club to its races, the matinee at Frank's Field speedway yesterday afternoon found enough stars at homes to fill out six events.

While it seemed a fruitless effort to attempt beating the invincible B. S. Dillon, yet A. J. Legg cheerfully produced his gelding, Wilkesbrino, for the slaughter, and succeeded in making the race quite interesting, as in the initial heat he made a apparent pace in 2 seconds to win by half a length.

E. O. O'Neil had Peggy-gold in the pink of a tie for his encounter with Genevieve, but a poor getaway left her a length behind at the quarter, and she had a hard time to overtake the leader. Genevieve was in front at the half, but Peggy-gold was in front at the three-quarters, and in the stretch drive she passed the winner by a couple of lengths in 32 seconds.

Big Wilkes need the winning trick on Miss Manager without losing a heat, and they did the same to Sunrise, the latter coming in first, though in the initial trip over the course.

DOUGLAS TROPHY WON BY 5TH REGIMENT

State Shoot for the Tri-Color Prize Goes to the Sixth Regiment Team.

Wakefield, Sept. 21.—The annual State shooting tournament came to a close to-day with the Douglas match for the trophy offered by ex-Governor Douglas, and was won by the Fifth Regiment. There were eight teams in the competition of twelve men each. The competition consisted of a 200-yard rapid fire match and skirmish running. The Fifth Regiment team won out with a total of 1,018, making 643 in the skirmish run, which is an honorable performance.

The Coast Guard Artillery was a close second, sixty-two points behind the leaders.

SCORING GRAFTERS, MORAN STATES "I WANT NO PARTY BACKING."

Old Parties Uniting to Oust Him, He Says, Lest He Send Leaders to Prison.

CALLS CITY HALL ROTTEN

Influential Politicians Will Soon Find Themselves Within Toils He Declares.

RUNS AS AN INDEPENDENT

Will Conduct His Own Campaign Without Any Organized Political Aid.

DISTRICT Attorney John B. Moran, in a letter to the people, states that he will not accept a nomination from any political party, but will be a candidate for re-election without organized support. He says he will campaign unaided and speak personally to the people. He says that a district attorney should have no political affiliations and that the Republican and Democratic leaders, in fear, and trembling of the result of Finance Commission disclosures, are now striving to defeat him in order that they may have in his office a man who will be their tool and save them from prison.

Mr. Moran says that City Hall is rotten to the core. He says that many influential leaders of the political party will soon find themselves within the toils of the law.

Let the big grafters and influential criminals now unite and select their own candidate," says Mr. Moran. His statement in full reads:

Moran's Statement.

"Two thirds of the duties of the office of District Attorney in Suffolk District at present consist of the three [illegible] office every year, and the remaining third of the duties consist of working [illegible] offices. I have been elected by both sides [illegible] and I have always endeavored to perform my duties [illegible] and fearlessly and impartially [illegible] the law. Judicial and semi-judicial offices should not be selected upon political lines. Such offices should be kept out of politics. The office of District Attorney for Suffolk is the most powerful office within the gift of the people. [illegible] subject of partisan politics. The District Attorney should be guided and helped by no Democratic partisan

Subjected to Pressure.

"The blind-bound adherent of a political party who always blindly votes for the candidate, good or bad, of his party is absolutely unfit for [illegible] position. Daily he will be subjected to all kinds of personal pressure and he will [illegible] his party action and party success to [illegible] his own political advancement, he will inevitably yield to such pressure and thus the office will become a tool in the hands of political [illegible].

"Elected by the people without a party nomination I have, will [illegible] equal determination, fearlessly [illegible] the duties of the office to [illegible] of the solicitation of political [illegible] and politicians. I have thus to unveil the vilest of the unpatriotic acts of the Democratic and Republican machine leaders.

"I fully realize the probable political consequences of my acts and yet in every instance, regardless of all consequences, I will unreservedly [illegible] the duty [illegible] I had a brain of my own with which to use and I accepted no other or no argument as a substitute for my own. I [illegible] the duty incurred by it and I [illegible] added the more potent factor—fear.

Would Elect Mere Tool.

"The politicians and political lawyers [illegible] me because they could not use me for their improper purposes have now become craven cowards as they anticipate from day to day the inevitable disclosures of their criminal conduct. In the interests of their divine and in the dungeon [illegible] fear sewage the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] by [illegible] the office of district attorney. In order that their complaisant tool may nullify the efforts of the Commonwealth.

"The politicians yet to come will denounce me that I try to [illegible] the core. Many influential leaders of both political parties will soon find themselves in the toils of the law. No tool of theirs who would hold the office of District Attorney. No man who needs or seeks the political approval would be [illegible].

"In order that [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Talks on Teeth

By G. GORDON MARTIN (Incorporated.)

Will These Teeth Last?

It is generally conceded by the dental profession that the Alveolar teeth [illegible] Many plates or [illegible] are beautiful in appearance, the work is [illegible] and [illegible] sent to [illegible] how long [illegible]

[illegible]

In the past [illegible] years we have treated [illegible] by ten thousand [illegible] —many of them [illegible] large portion of our work is on the "last resort" order.

Our business has grown until now has assumed a volume which puts [illegible] the dental profession.

We [illegible] how long we could have stood business in this work had [illegible] a temporary makeshift? Nothing, success, [illegible] cess has been achieved because of sheer merits and not by ease or accident.

The courts have been generous —first through the granting of patents [illegible] and then they have again come to our rescue and given us the exclusive right to the word Alveolar, as applied to our method. It has also [illegible] a pass that dentists everywhere were stealing our thunder by their wholesale [illegible] some party in Western city [illegible] advertising matter but our name and the names of our branch offices. He believes in the doctrine of the whole hog or none.

We hereby publicly warn these business pirates that we shall proceed against them whenever and wherever they may be operating, and give them some good free advertising in their home towns. The American people love a square deal and hate one of these substitute fakers, no matter what he may be trying to imitate.

Our next notice will come from our attorneys and will be vigorously pushed.

Don't Use Our Trade Mark Alveolar—You Have No Right To It.

Again, don't tell your patients that the Alveolar Method of supplying missing teeth is not permanent if we can show a mass of evidence in support of our claims that it is.

Here is one testimonial—from Mr. H. C. Gardner, of Pullman, Ill. Read it carefully:

G. GORDON MARTIN, [illegible] Chicago, Ill.

[illegible] for a great many years [illegible] with my [illegible] I [illegible] All that is [illegible] two or [illegible] teeth and [illegible] work with [illegible] work takes but a few days to complete.

Then you have a real set of teeth, almost as perfect as nature's, and which should last as long. They are firm and solid in the mouth—look, act and feel like [illegible]

'OD SLOAN, FAMOUS JOCKEY, GIVES FRIENDS THE SLIP; WEDS ACTRESS

ulla Sanderson Hurries to Footlights After the Marriage Ceremony.

OTED IN ROLE OF "PEGGY"

ride of 20 Made Hit in "Fantana"; Couple Contemplates Honeymoon Abroad.

New York, Sept. 21.—Tod Sloan, former jockey and at one time esteemed as the cleverest rider in the world, was married this evening at [illegible] to Julia Sanderson, the pretty little actress playing the part of "Peggy," the dairy maid, at the Criterion.

The ceremony was performed at seven o'clock by the Rev. Henry Marsh Warren, of No. 48 West Ninety-fourth street, in Mr. Sloan's apartments at No. 142 West Forty-fourth street.

The only persons present were Miss Mabelle B. Gibson, who acted as bridesmaid, William Baldwin Sherrer, who served as best man, and Frank Lee, secretary to Rev. Mr. Warren.

Immediately following the ceremony Miss Sloan retired to her dressing room at the theatre across the street to be ready for the evening performance.

Few of her friends knew of the marriage. It was supposed generally that the wedding would take place at the Little Church Around the Corner in the afternoon.

Mr. Sloan started [illegible] he was coming to New York. After a short [illegible] twenty years [illegible] under the name of Tod Sloan, [illegible] 18 [illegible] years [illegible] A small [illegible] topped off the wedding festivities after the theatre performance.

DOCTORS QUARREL OVER CLEVELAND

Former President, Believed to Be Seriously Ill, Put in Care of New York Specialist.

PRINCETON, N. J., Sept. 21.—As a result of dispute between the physicians, former President Grover Cleveland, who is believed to be in serious condition at his home, Westland, near here, has been put in the hands of a new specialist, Dr. Banks of New York and Larchmont.

Dr. Banks, who had been hurriedly summoned, reached here this forenoon. On the same train with him came Mrs. Cleveland's mother, Mrs. Perrine Rose, accompanied by a maid. All three were rapidly driven from the station to a closed carriage to the Cleveland home.

Dr. Carnahan and Dr. Bryant, who have been attending Mr. Cleveland, are said to have disagreed as to who was properly in authority in the case. It is said their clash reached so acute a stage that both decided to retire, uniting in a request to the family of their distinguished patient that another physician be retained. Both of them refused to-day to make any statements.

The head nurse also left yesterday. Her departure created some surprise, as she had stated no longer than the day before that she would be here at least for a month, adding that Mr. Cleveland could not possibly recover under that time, and that he would have to have some extraordinary care and rest to be sure of getting up and out in a month.

She packed up and went yesterday after noon. It is understood that she quarrelled with Dr. Carnahan, Mr. Cleveland's friend on physician, regarding the invalid's diet.

Callers at Westlands to-day were met at the door by a nurse. She declared that Mr. Cleveland was "doing very well," and refused all other information regarding the former President's condition.

"GREEDY IN FORMER LIFE," SAYS MRS. BESANT OF JOHN D.

Theosophists' Head Says Oil King's Wits Were Sharpened by Re-Incarnation.

Mrs. Annie Besant, world's president of the Theosophical Society, lecturer and deliverer in the second, third and fourth audience of 1,200 last night, in Tremont Temple, that America would never lead the world until its present chase after the golden fleece was abandoned, and the thought of the people turned towards the intellectual and beautiful. Until the people of America select the best and noblest men of political places the country cannot expect to rank as an exemplar, says Mrs. Besant.

It was a full house for the assimilation of the best in all denominations, and a wish for the upbuilding of character in all mankind.

Discusses Politics.

Mrs. Besant's remarks on the political situation in Boston and Massachusetts were closely followed. Many thought she referred to the situation in Boston and Massachusetts when she said:

"I fear that politics in this country do not offer the field that attracts to the tilling the best and noblest of mankind. The welfare of a nation depends on its political situation. You would not allow your house to be moved by ignorant men, yet you allow your country, your State, your city and town to be governed by ignorant men. Politics is the business of every man. You should make it your business."

To an American reporter yesterday, Mrs. Besant, in discussing her belief, said when asked who John D. Rockefeller was in former life:

"In a former life, Mr. Rockefeller must have developed a wonderful greed for gain. Perhaps that was the sole struggle of his life time, and, at death, the wish was ungratified. He was born again with faculties sharpened, and the desire of his former life intensified. His desires has been gratified, but look at the cost."

Can't Place Harriman.

Theodore Roosevelt, in one of his former lives, according to Mrs. Besant, stored up so much capability and strength that it burst forth in this life so that he became famous for his energy and spirit. Harriman might have done things in one of his former peripatations, but it was left to Mrs. Besant.

Although Mrs. Besant will be sixty years old, October 1, she looks much younger. Statuesque, with a most pleasing appearance, her keen grey eyes, and closely cropped white hair add to her attractiveness. Last night she wore a loose white robe of oriental silk, a flimsy trimming for her throat, and a string of Egyptian beads about her neck.

Mrs. Besant delivers two more lectures in Boston. Tonight and tomorrow night in Jordan Hall she will discuss the various phases of Theosophy.

HUNT FIREBUG WHO PLIED TORCH TWICE

Alarms for two fires were sounded in such quick succession from Box No. 10, corner of Hanover and Clark streets, last night, that, coupled with other evidence, the suspicions of the police became aroused, and they immediately began search for a firebug. Enough evidence was secured to give them a cite. A man whose description they have is an Italian, whose arrest may be brought about soon.

The first fire occurred at No. 19 Harris street, a four-story brick building, occupied by six families. As the fire originated in a woodshed in the basement, smoke soon warned the inmates and they all got out without difficulty. The building is the property of Peter Bradi.

The second fire was no more serious than the first. It was at No. 3 Cleveland place and also began in a woodshed. The damage was about $25.

HEAD CUT UP BY POLICEMAN'S CLUB

Suffering from five scalp wounds, the result of a fight with Patrolman Frank Rooney, last night, John Sheridan, forty-four years old, of Brookline, is a prisoner at the Roxbury police station. He is charged with drunkenness, but other charges may be placed against him.

According to the police, Sheridan was creating a disturbance at Francis street and Fenwood road last night. When ordered to move on, it is said, he refused.

Rooney tried to place him under arrest, and they clinched. In the scuffle, the police say Sheridan drew Rooney's revolver and tried to shoot. Rooney drew his club, and, after using it on the prisoner, succeeded in arresting him. Sheridan's wounds were dressed at the station, and he was locked up.

HUMORISTS ERECT BILL NYE SHAFT

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 21.—The American Press Humorists closed their convention in this city with an entertainment at which $1,000 was taken in for the fund to erect a monument to "Bill Nye" at Laramie, Wyo. A telegram was read from Craigs Nethercole subscribing $25.

MOLINEUX'S PHOTO STAYS WITH ROGUES'

Albany, N. Y., Sept. 21.—Roland B. Molineux's picture must remain in the rogues' gallery, the attorney-general having decided to-day that the law, passed recently permitting the removal from the rogues' galleries of pictures of persons not convicted eventually, is not retroactive in its operation.

LOVESICK WOMAN SUICIDE IN RIVER

Disappointed in love is given by those who knew something of her as the reason for the suicide of Mrs. Rita V. Johnson, a widow, whose body was found yesterday on the mud flats near Harvard bridge on the Cambridge side of the Charles River.

The body was taken to the morgue in Lafayette square and the Boston police notified.

She lived at No. 4 Burbank street. She is survived by a son about ten years of age. It is thought that she threw herself into the water late Friday night.

BURNED LIGHTING FIRE, WOMAN DIES

After suffering untold agonies, Mrs. Bertha J. Seavers, 59 years old, died yesterday afternoon at Faulkner Hospital from burns received while lighting a fire at her home, No. 29 John A. Andrew street, Jamaica Plain.

According to custom, Mrs. Seavers arose early yesterday to prepare the breakfast. While standing near the stove a slight breeze caused her dress to catch the stove. In a moment her clothes were blazing. Her cries brought members of the family, but not until she had been severely burned. Dr. Broughton, after bandaging the burns, ordered Mrs. Seavers removed to the hospital.

ALLAN AND GERMAN LINES DROP RATES

New York, Sept. 21.—The North German Lloyd announces a reduction of $25 in trans-Atlantic rates. This reduction on eastbount rates is effective at once, while on westbound it is effective after November 1. This is the most radical reduction yet announced.

It is announced to-day that the Allan line will meet all cuts and go them one better. The rate of $55 and $42.50 for second cabin is said to be the rate agreed upon, though not as yet officially announced. They are expected to take effect Monday.

HELEN GOULD

The Story of Her Life and Her Charities

BY HER FORMER PRIVATE SECRETARY

Helen Gould is widely beloved as a woman who gives not only her wealth but also her time to her great charities, but to all but very few of those who have benefited by her largeness of heart she is practically an unknown personality. The first authentic intimate article ever written on Miss Gould, her life, her work, her habits, and the hundred and one things that go to make up her personality is in October COSMOPOLITAN. A former private secretary has set down her recollections of Miss Gould, and the delightful article is illustrated with many intimate photographs, among them a beautiful portrait of Miss Gould, the first ever presented to the public.

Ellis Parker Butler who wrote "Pigs Is Pigs," a story that sent a roar of laughter from one end of the country to the other, has written another story equal to, if not better than, his former famous yarn. "Tim Lloyd and the Llama," in October COSMOPOLITAN, is the narrative of Tim Lloyd's funny adventures as Major-General of a South American comic opera republic, Tolucca by name, and how he organized a new arm of the Toluccan army, the llama artillery brigade, of which he was made commandant, and how he conquered the neighboring rival republic, Dacca, after the complete failure of his llama brigade.

Mr. Oppenheim, author of "The Malefactor," and other stories of the kind that hold the reader spellbound from first to last word, has written a series for the COSMOPOLITAN—"The Long Arm of Mannister—in which Mannister is a worthy successor of Sherlock Holmes and Monsieur Lecocq. One by one he runs to earth a bold and cunning band of conspirators who for ingenuity of device and daring of execution have few equals in the annals of fiction. The brave, keen and resourceful Mannister copes single-handed with his enemies in a series of adventures that will keep the reader's interest alert to the very end. E. Phillips Oppenheim

Not only these, but much more—Morgan Robertson's finest story of the year, "The Twins"; Goldwin Smith's article on "The World-Menace of Japan"; an exhaustive record on "The Problem of Air Flight"; Alan Dale's question, "Has Simple Love Ceased to Be Dramatic?" And there are several other remarkable contributions, any or all of which may be just what you want to read.
